We didn't always have the best jobs in the world

ALEX Photo-copier

“ Photocopying microfiche all day long and printing out the results. That was it. I was frowned upon if I went to the toilet more than twice a day and although there was absolutely no dealing with the public, I still had to turn up for work in smart clothes ”

JIM Record salesman

“ Working in WH Smith's record department. I'm a big record collector (i.e. they have to have a diameter of at least 12" – boom boom), so I thought it would be the ideal job. That is, until the boss called me into his office and told me there was no discount for casual staff ”

STEVE Lazy Arse

“ I've never had another job, so this one has to be my worst! I somehow managed to go through my entire teenage years without having to do any part-time jobs along the lines of those described by the other N64 Pros. Actually, I quite fancy a paper round to be honest. The money would be better for a start... ”

NOELY Dairy Assistant

“ A dairy assistant. Unloading crates of Long Life milk from a massive conveyor belt, stacking them on a pallet a certain way, dropping them off, then going back and repeating the process until I died. Which I often did, I can tell you ”

MARK Pork pie operative

“ I worked in a pork pie factory. Anyone who's ever worked in any factory will understand. Put it this way, after I saw what went into pork pies, I never ate one again. No siree. It's 100 rolled-up fags a day for me from now on. Far healthier ”

LEWIS Glass collector

“ I was a glass-collector for two days at a pub that was far from local. I was forced into it by Income Support and had to catch two buses there and three to get back. After being told off for breaking two glasses, I threatened to stab the landlord with the shards and promptly left ”

Officially not only the best and most realistic racer on the N64 but the finest F1 game to grace any console. Check Noely's review for the amazing challenge mode that should have been done years ago

Okay, so not every game on the N64 is a world-beater, but hey it's all part of our job to tell you what's good and what's bad. Isn't that right, KA Unwin from Manchester?

30 Off-Road Challenge by Mark

Certainly can't accuse Mark of hogging all the best games for review. Still, it makes him appreciate his nightly solo sessions on GoldenEye 007 all the more

34 WWF War Zone by Noely

With the glaring exception of Iggy's Reckin Balls, Acclaim are going from strength to strength in the world of the N64 – War Zone's certainly better than real wrestling

38 Buck Bumble by Mark

Mark's been buzzing off this all month, but he really had no need to get a bee in his bonnet about it. You see, UbiSoft's new bee'em-up is like the honeycombed middle of a Malteser – it weighs so little

42 Rakuga Kids by Mark

One thing's for sure – this won't come out over here! Unless of course we get a Japanese Prime Minister or Queen or something. Quite simply the bizarrest beat'em-up since the dawn of time

The verb 'to wreck' means to hurt in certain pockets of the North, so the title of this game could easily have 'rude' connotations. Luckily for all concerned it's actually a spirally puzzle/race game

46 Waialae Golf by Alex

The N64 is not only capable of running a good golf game, it deserves one. So what Nintendo were thinking about when they decided this was fit for UK consumption is beyond us

V-Rally 64

Infogrames rejoin the battle for top N64 racer, but this time they've brought out the really big guns

WHEN A GAME GOES down well on the PI**Station it really goes down well. And V-Rally was massive. So, barring a massive cock-up over at Infogrames in France, it's fair to say that V-Rally '98 – a redesigned, much enhanced and overhauled version of the original PI**Station title – should set the N64 gaming world alight.

Receiving a major tune-up from the previous installment and promising more variety than the likes of Top Gear Rally, this is the racing game that most N64 owners just can't wait for – and from what we've seen, not without good reason.

Players get to drive the very latest in rally technology around eight wildly different territories, ranging from France to the Far East. More specifically, these include the French Alps track which runs right through the heart of one of the world's most famous mountain ranges and requires full concentration, quick reflexes and excellent cornering skills. Then there's England where a mud-soaked excursion through our green and pleasant lands will ensue, a trip round Spain's dusty backroads and a frantic race around New Zealand's sheep infested terrain among many others.

And just like in real life, the variable weather conditions, such as brilliant sunlight, fog, rain and snow, affect the handling of the car and the visibility for the driver in just the way you would expect it too.

High Velocity Rallying

Game modes are plentiful with options to drive in either arcade mode, time trial or championship modes. Most exciting though is the N64 exclusive Rally Mode, where players get to race one-by-one against the clock, just as they would in a real life rally. Don't worry though, there'll be plenty of multi player thrills and spills to keep you occupied as well with split-screen races for up to four people at any one time with little or no drop off in speed.

The blandsters will be pleased to hear that the licenses for 12 of 1998's top cars from the likes of Toyota, Ford, Mitsubishi, Subaru, Nissan, Peugeot, Renault, Seat and even Skoda. And all will handle accurately in relation to their real-life counterparts. We've got an exclusive in-depth V-Rally '98 preview next month, so make sure you check that out if you want to know more.

V-Rally '98 promises to leave its PI**Station cousin standing on the start line. The N64 version is bigger, better and faster in just about every conceivable way. Definitely one to look forward to. A potential classic “N64 gamers have been crying out for a decent driving game for ages. Now they've got one”

- Midway are hoping to get the jump on their NFL competitors by getting their NFL Blitz game out before EA can release Madden '99 and Acclaim finish QB Club. Blitz could even be in the shops by the time you read this! We'll be reviewing at least two of them next issue

Extreme Interest

At a recent event in America, Acclaim unveiled Extreme G 2. Bub Taylor was there to check it out...

IT WASN'T A FAN of the original Extreme G. It was just too damn fast. So is the sequel any better? Sure, although there's still a long way to go before this comes close to knocking F-Zero X off its lofty perch.

The gameplay is very similar to the original, with players again jumping on a futuristic bike and haring down some of the twistiest tracks imaginable, however, it still suffers from a feeling that you're being guided around the track by an invisible hand. I mean, you'd have to be, because there's no way you could navigate your way round the lightening fast bends without some help.

The first difference you'll notice is that the front end has been completely redesigned – a much needed change after the excessive darkness of the original. The graphics have also been reworked. Remember how the cars just looked like a solid lump in the original? Well now all bikes include movable parts and even bend slightly in the middle on impact.

Hopefully, UK based Probe will put in the extra work required to get the framerate knocked up to scratch. If they do, and can manage to refine the gameplay suitably enough, they could have a contender on their hands. The intentions are certainly right, and Probe are working hard to provide new innovations, both graphical and gameplay-wise, but it'll be a harder task than they imagine to convince sceptics such as myself than the whole Extreme G concept isn't a flawed one.

Battle of the Beasts

Strategy fans rejoice! Blizzard's StarCraft is nearly here and Quest's Ogre Battle 3 is looking trouser wettingly good as well!

LOOSELY MODELLED on the original SNES hit, the tentatively titled Ogre Battle 3 has finally been revealed in all its glory. Just like the original, the game puts the player in control of an army of units that can move about the landscape in real-time.

It's largely a strategy-based affair with strong RPG overtones, but don't be misled, there are no puzzle elements whatsoever – your party like to use their might to overcome any obstacles, not their minds. The battles themselves are lively affairs though with all manner of mad magical spells and weapons attack that can be carried out.

Battles can take place both outdoors and inside buildings, and during the quest you will visit many kingdoms in peril and come across much betrayal and intrigue. You'll will make new allies with the non-player characters as you go, and the enemies can even defect to your side or come to their senses when approached in the right way.

In our opinion it's about time there was something like this on the N64 – something we can really get our teeth into – and anyone who likes a little bit more from their games than just collecting nuts whilst in control of a beaver, should eagerly awaited this Christmas release from Quest. We can't wait.

Bust-A-Move 3

FANS OF THE FIENDISHLY addictive Bust-A-Move series of puzzlers from Acclaim, will no doubt be thrilled to hear that a sequel is already well under way and should make it in time for the pre-Christmas rush. It has to be said that this looks alarmingly similar to Bust-A-Move 2, but then if you're a fan you wouldn't really have expected many changes anyway.

New features for this latest instalment include an exciting and new four-player head-to-head battle mode, Rumble Pak support, special power bubbles to fire (stars, metal, rainbow and more) and literally thousands of new puzzles. There's not a great deal else we can say really, except take a look at these hot off the development kit shots that we've managed to get our hands on

● It's been confirmed that Zelda 64 will ship on a special shiny gold cartridge. We speculated about this happening months ago, but finally Nintendo have come clean and admitted that it will actually happen as we thought ●

When Dinosaurs Ruled the N64

As the hype approaches fever pitch and Turok Two-day draws ever nearer, Acclaim unleash a feast of new information to an ever famished press pack

ACCCLAIM CERTAINLY KNOW how to make the headlines these days, and the entire industry was stunned by the announcement that Turok 2 will appear on an absolutely massive cart. In fact, the cart's so large that it's the joint biggest ever used for a video game to date! The silicon beast will be a whopping 32mb (256 megabit) monster the like of which has never been seen before!

To give you some idea of the scale of things you need to bear in mind (and you'll have to excuse the appalling pun there) that Banjo's cart was a mere 16mb (128 megabit) which seems puny by comparison.

Anyone who's played Banjo (and who hasn't?) will know that it's an enormous game, and therefore the possibilities for Turok 2 are, quite literally, enormous.

But that's not all. With all that room to play around the developers have decided to make use of it in quite a special way. On the cart will be two versions of the game, identical in every way, but for the fact that one of them will run in a stunning 640x480 high-resolution mode! And believe us, when you see it your jaw will drop.

There is a drawback though. To run the hi-res version you'll need to have purchased and installed the much talked about memory expansion pak for your N64, and since Nintendo are as vague as ever about whether or not that will ever see the light of day, this could prove to be a little tricky (see Thanks for the Memory for more details). However, regardless of whether or not Nintendo scrap the add-on, Acclaim are pressing ahead with the version, so you can guarantee someone will make use of it.

Bub had a chance to play both modes and assures us that while the game in its normal resolution is one of the N64's finest graphical moments to date. Most people are going to want to get hold of an expansion pak, by hook or by crook, as soon as they see it. No pictures just yet, but as soon as we have some, we'll print them. You can be sure of that.

Each new batch of Turok screenshots is even more jaw dropping than the last. Acclaim have got their work cut out to improve on these though

Thanks for the Memory

FOR THE LAST YEAR we've all been talking about the 64DD, but it may well turn out that the most essential new add-on for your N64 could become a four meg memory expansion pak.

Always thought to be bundled with the increasingly doomed 64DD, it's now hoped that it will be released as a stand-alone product, at least in the meantime, and if it is your gaming experiences will be greatly enhanced.

Iguana are already making use of it for Turok 2, but we've heard from several other key manufacturers that they'd like to use it in their games.

Nintendo however are, as ever, tight-lipped about the product's future. All is not lost though, even if Nintendo decide not to bother (which, as far as we can see would be daft).

Third-party manufacturers are already falling over themselves to get one out first, so third-party developers at least will be able to make use of it.

It's prediction time and N64 Pro firmly believes that Nintendo will bring out the Expansion Pak at a very low cost, and suspects that it may even be bundled free with a must-have title, such as Zelda or Donkey Kong Country 64. But what we know for certain, and how we know it, remains a closely guarded secret.

Beautiful graphics come at a cost. You'll need one of these to get the most out of the new breed of games like Turok 2: Seeds of Evil

● Work continues apace on the sequel to Top Gear Rally – Top Gear Overdrive. We've had a sneaky look and are happy to report that it's a vast improvement over the original already.

Whether it'll be better than Infogrames' fantastic V-Rally '98 though remains to be seen ●

Bowled Over

It's amazing what a shot in the arm a quick name change and a few months of development can give to a game these days

REMEMBER A FEW months back we told you about one of newly formed Square offshoot, Crave Entertainment, and their first product, Milo's Bowlarama? It was a quirky Jetsons meets ten-pin bowling game that we'd never quite seen the like of before? Well, it still is a quirky ten pin bowling game, and it still looks like the Jetsons cartoon, but now it's no longer called Milo's Bowlarama. Now it's going under the much more pleasant title of Milo's Astro Lanes, and is apparently smack on course for its Quarter 3 release date.

We've had a quick play and reckon that it's progressing quite nicely. It adds a nice twist on the admittedly small bowling genre by mixing in both cartoony elements and a dash of 'wackiness' that also gives it a crazy-golf type of feel with bumpers, U-curved lanes, 10° angled lanes, S-Curved lanes, Zigzag lanes, multi-layered lanes and even corkscrews. Certainly nothing like any MegaBow! we've ever been to anyway.

Player 1, the game's actual developers, has also been working on a realistic physics model, both for the bowlers and the bowling balls. Characters automatically approach the lane where upon players are given complete control of a bowler's wrist, which works by pivoting in a number of degrees.

Everything is controlled via the analogue stick, and using this players can put spin on a ball, make it bounce, curve to one side, or even bend it around a corner. The longer a player lasts the more experienced their bowler becomes, which leads to more techniques and hidden lanes.

Anyway, for now you'll have to make do with having a gander at these latest screenshots. Until we do a full preview in the next couple of months that is.

Horses for Courses

ALONGSIDE SUCH blockbuster titles as Castlevania and Hybrid Heaven, Konami are also continuing work on their phenomenally popular range of cutesy games, the latest one being a 'serious, but fun' horse racing game called G1 Stable. The game will give players complete control over their own stables – from horse breeding (steady) to the actual races themselves.

Interestingly (well, we think it's interesting), is that the game will make use of the 64GB Pak made incredibly popular in Japan recently by Pokemon's solid performance, and you'll be able to swap data between G1 and the GameBoy title Pocket Stable.

Konami is steadfastly refusing to give us any in-game graphics, so here's a lovely render for you to feast your eyes on until we can sneak in and nick some when they're not looking. This, and the other games in development mean that the Sport of Kings will be well represented on the N64 with this, Derby Stallion 64 and Culture Brain's Hashire Boku No Uma all due out shortly after the turn of the year ●

Learn your Lessons

Think you know it all about games do you? Well now's your chance to put your money where your mouth is!

WE'VE HEARD IT all now. Salford University are launching the first ever undergraduate degree course in computer and video games! Apparently, the university wanted to produce a recognised degree for the ever growing games industry and, in conjunction with ELSPA, feels it has done so. Sounds like a right skive to us.

Salford is keen to stress that the course will teach no programming skills, so you don't have to worry about mixing with those unsavoury types. The thrust of the four year course will largely be based around project management and business skills. The examples provided show the diverse and separate elements of a game, how to manage teams of creative people, how to get them to meet deadlines on a tight budget and how to present a design and market a finished product. Okay, so maybe it doesn't sound like quite so much of a skive anymore.

Any of you youngsters interested in taking this course should beware. Salford University expect the course to be massively over subscribed, so they'll be able to pick the absolute cream of the crop and turn away the wasters. So you'd better get cracking on that GCSE coursework hadn't you!

The course itself starts in September 1999 with an extremely limited number of spaces available – thought at this point to be around 20. However, if successful, the plan is to expand the course and hopefully get up to around 35 available places over the next few years.

● Ubisoft are expecting big things of Buck Bumble, predicting massive sales in the UK on launch, shipping some 60 thousand copies to stores initially. The feeling of the N64 Pro team is that their hopes are way too high. Check out page 38 for Mark's definitive review ●

Pocket Monster Mash

Little monsters set the whole of Japan alight in pocket-style frenzy

HOPE SPRINGS ETERNAL for Nintendo in Japan. As hoped, the release of the first in the Pocket Monsters series has breathed new life into the machine with the title smashing into the Japanese all format charts with a bullet at number 2, just failing to nobble PI**Station RPG Star Ocean Second Story.

In just one week since release, Pocket Monster Stadium has sold a mammoth 170,390 copies, and for a Nintendo game in Japan, those are almost unheard of numbers. But the real test will come over the next few weeks, where the game needs to demonstrate some serious staying power to really start bucking any trends. Nintendo hope that plenty of new machines will be sold on the back of this game, and while it's a good start, it's nothing more than that. No one's getting too excited just yet.

Are you just pleased to see me?

We've had the game in our office for a couple of days now (not quite long enough to do it justice in a review), but initial impressions are favourable. Well, Noely seems to be enjoying it anyway, so you can read into that whatever you want.

A word of caution – although it is possible to fumble your way through the import version of the game, if you're the type that gets frustrated by screen upon screen of Japanese text, this may overwhelm you. Wait for next month's review for our final verdict.

Alien Resurrection

A blast from the past as Activision resurrect a classic

RETRO FREAKS will no doubt be delirious to hear that those masters of the update, Activision (well, they redid Pitfall anyway), has acquired the rights to make games based on Taito's grandfather of all shoot'em-ups, the mighty Space Invaders. As usual the stingy sods weren't giving much away, so we're left to speculate what exactly they'll do with the rights.

Apparently, a deal is already in place with Crave Entertainment to allow the fledgling company the chance to make games based on other classics that Activision have bought up the rights for – namely, Asteroids and BattleZone – so many, ourselves included, are presuming that a similar sort of agreement may be reached over this.

Interdimensional invaders

No doubt the updated version will ditch the two dimensional loveliness of the original, and all that remains to be seen is whether Activision can manage to retain enough of its original appeal once the transformation into an extra dimension is complete. Another exciting potential innovation is the myriad of multi player opportunities opened up by today's more powerful games machine. The possibilities are quite literally limitless. It just depends how adventurous the programmer's are prepared to be. Let's hope they really push the N64's capabilities with this one.

Those pesky invaders from space are back, and this time they're armed with a special weapon – an extra dimension!

“By updating this classic with cutting-edge technology and explosive graphics we believe that Space Invaders will appeal to more than just those who remember it as after-school escapism”

Activision CEO Robert Kotick gets in a froth about Space Invaders 64

● N64's exclusive Duke Nukem: Zero Hour is shaping up to possibly be the game to match GoldenEye. If GT can whip the frame-rates up to scratch then Duke's certainly got all the moves and style to give Rare's masterpiece a good run for its money ●

Shove Ha'penny

It's a crazy upside down world as THQ's Penny Racers flies in, looking exactly like Jap import game ChoroQ!

PENNY RACERS is set to offer racing fans of the genre big-time replay value with its unique vehicle modification system and track editor feature. Penny Racers is a new racing title for the N64 which enables players to construct and race their own vehicles based on the popular Penny Racers toy range. Gamers begin by choosing one of 13 cool body styles for their vehicle, then enter a racing circuit comprised of nine hair-raising courses.

With racing success comes the ability to tune-up and modify each Penny Racer with 100 parts in categories including body, engine, tires, steering, brakes, decorative parts, armour and weapons. Modifications become available via a point allocation system based on racing class, and a cannibalisation feature that allows the winners of each race to acquire the best parts from the losers' vehicles.

The game features over 20 predefined hair-raising courses, four speed and customisation classes - AA, A, B, C, over 100 authentic car Penny Racers body styles, 100 upgrades, modifications and weapons for custom-made racers and a track editor feature for unlimited courses. Power slides, drifting and "barrel rolls" and battle weapons. Ahem... see ChoroQ - which is basically Penny Racers in Japanese - check out page 32 for more information.

Check these screenshots, then turn to page 32 to see just how similar this game looks to ChoroQ

GT In Sleep Shocker

GT INTERACTIVE HAS secured the rights to Eurocom's N64 title 40 Winks. GT fought off fierce competition from a host of publishers to sign the world wide publishing rights to 40 Winks on N64 and PS**Station.

This deal further underlines GT Europe's strategy of product acquisition and its drive towards becoming a European as well as a US publishing force. The title is scheduled for release in the latter stages of 1999 and is expected to fall into the 'AAA' (i.e. 'it's a bit good') category.

Eurocom's past successes have included Duke Nukem 64, Disney's Hercules and Cruisin' World. GT's Publishing Director, Marc Swallow, said of the deal, "We believe that Eurocom with 40 Winks have found the publishing home for what is destined to be one of the benchmark titles of next year. Our strength in marketing and distribution will ensure this title the success that it deserves. Eurocom are establishing an enviable reputation in the development community as providers of the very best in entertainment software."

Mat Snaap, director of Eurocom and project lead on 40 Winks echoed this, "We are delighted to partner with GT Interactive in the production of 40 Winks. Our choice of GT as publisher is based on their global distribution, superb marketing resources and their strong team of producers."

What it's actually about, however, still isn't clear as yet! We'll know more info by next month's ish, though. Eurocom Developments Ltd develops action-based entertainment software for the Sony, Nintendo, Sega and PC.

Eurocom is an independent company founded in 1988 and has developed more than 40 titles on console and PC platforms. The company employs a creative team of 70 developers based in Derby ●

Costumed Vengeance

WCW/NWO Revenge takes wrestling to the N64th degree with a realistic yet hilarious grapple'em-up

THQ ARE BEING as cocky as the wrestlers they portray in WCW/NWO Revenge, by claiming it's "The most realistic wrestling title on the market featuring double the wrestlers, double the realism, and double the fun of any other title."

WCW/NWO Revenge, the sequel to the mega-hit WCW vs. NWO: World Tour, boasts the largest assortment of WCW and NWO superstars in a wrestling title, displaying more of their signature moves and taunts.

This massive 128 MB cartridge also allows players to save vital statistics on an individual wrestler's win/loss record and the belts he holds. Armchair grapplers control their favourite wrestler's destiny with a complete costume edit feature - switching wrestlers from WCW to NWO. A new and improved Battle Royale mode adds unrelenting action to this power-packed title, allowing a player to fight his way to the top, in a 40-man, all out war.

Arcade-style scores are given at the end of each match and there's a new "Championship" mode allowing players to win the different WCW belts. There are real Pay-Per-View arenas, including Bash at the Beach, Souled Out, Halloween Havoc, Starrcade and more, with each wrestler making a stunning entrance accompanied by WCW theme music and over 700 frames of animation per wrestler.

Smoother animations, better graphics, faster speed, improved AI, new character texture maps, including realistic faces, hair and tattoos have all been included. The game will even feature a costume edit mode that lets you change your favourite wrestler's costume to whatever you fancy - so long as it's in spandex!

To wrap the whole thing up, the game features the voice and the likeness of official WCW referee Mark Curtis and is rumble pak compatible, making for some strong wrists if the action's half as exciting as THQ are making out. Find out more in next month's preview.

"I truly believe that in anti-gravity racing, we have created a hymn to the soaring human spirit"

— Pierre Belmondo, anti-gravity pioneer, writing in his autobiography 'Leaving The Earth Behind' (Goldsmith & Goldsmith Publishing)

Team select

AG SYSTEMS

A Japanese team with highly controllable craft. However, in order to gain some extra speed, some shield energy has been sacrificed. Ideal for the slightly more experienced pilot

AURICOM

The American Auricom Research team use a powerful engine giving excellent speed capabilities. Their craft are quite difficult to handle and are therefore more suitable for the intermediate pilot

QIREX

This Russian team operate extremely fast, power-hungry ships. The difficulty in controlling them makes the Qirex craft suitable only for very experienced pilots

FEISAR

This European consortium opt for ease of control above speed, although their craft accelerate well. Superb for beginner pilots

News

Playing the game

Whichever type of race you've chosen, the basic craft control system remains the same

SHIELD ENERGY

Each time you collide with the side of the track or are hit by an enemy weapon, your shield energy will be depleted. When shield energy levels reach zero, your ship will explode. The on-screen shield energy bar shows your shield energy level at a glance

SPEED-UPS

These are blue arrows on the track. Fly over them for a brief speed boost

CHECKPOINTS

As soon as you begin a race, a countdown showing your allotted time will be activated. If the counter reaches zero before you pass the next checkpoint, the game will be over

WEAPON GRIDS

These are coloured crosses on the track. Fly over them to pick up a weapon. The weapons and power-ups section gives more information. Remember that weapon grids are deactivated in a time trial, although one turbo power-up will be allocated each time your craft crosses the Start line. The option to race without weapons is also available

Key features

Six awesome race circuits with jaw-dropping scenery and superfast race thrills

- 15 ships on track at once
- Five new super-weapons with spectacular graphical effects
- Multi player tournament mode
- Split-screen racing with up to four players for intense multi player action
- Supports the N64 Rumble Pak

Class select

VECTOR

The slowest racing class, ideal for getting used to the circuits. Single races at Vector speed are two laps long

VENOM

A medium paced racing class for the rookie pilot. Single races at Venom speed are three laps long

RAPIER

A super-fast racing class for experienced F5000

pilots. Single races at Rapier speed are four laps long

Racing Modes

SINGLE RACE

Raw racing action with powerful weapons against 14 other craft

TIME TRIAL

There's no-one else out there on the track,

it's just you against the clock. A ghost craft repeats the best lap raced on the chosen track at the chosen class, so beat it if you can.

On the first lap, you'll be given an automatic turbo start and a turbo power up as you cross the start line. On each subsequent lap, you'll get a turbo power up as you cross the start line, but remember that you can only keep one turbo at a time.

When you're in time trial mode, the checkpoint time in the top left corner of the HUD screen shows the difference between your current lap and the ghost lap. If you're slower than the ghost lap, the time difference appears in white. If you're ahead of the ghost lap, the difference appears in yellow with a minus indicator. The session best time is also displayed, which shows the best time recorded during a session on a specific track and racing class.

CHALLENGE

A series of race challenges designed to test your anti-gravity racing prowess to the full. If you want to reach the pinnacle of F5000 racing, this is the option for you. When racing in this mode, the target display will appear on-screen - this indicates the next appropriate target for you to reach

MULTI PLAYER

The most intense multi player racing in history. Up to four pilots can race to join the elite, but only one can win the game.

“We race. We die. There is no beauty any more”

- Stefan Geist of the Qirex F5000 anti-gravity race team responding to Pierre Belmondo on a live Datacast discussion show, March 2098

Weapons and power-ups

All weapons are pre-loaded onto your craft before a race. When you fly over a weapon grid, one of them will be activated and the relevant weapon icon appears on-screen

Mines

When fired, mines drop from the back of craft. They cause damage to ships which fly into them, but can be destroyed using the Thunder Bomb

E-Pak

When activated, an E-Pak will boost your shield energy

Autopilot

When activated, your ship switches to autopilot and will fly under automatic control for a short period. When this period of time is up an on-screen message 'disengaging' is displayed. However, it will only disengage when the ship is on an even keel. You may disengage the autopilot at any time by pressing the Bottom C Button. This will return you instantly to manual control

Turbo boost

When fired, a Turbo Boost speeds up the craft very quickly for a short period

Rockets

Rockets fire in bursts of three from the front of the craft and drain shield energy on impact. They have terrain hugging capability, but fire only in a straight line. Aim carefully

Missiles

Similar to rockets, but only fires one at a time. Missiles have heat-seeking capability and can lock on to enemies both in front and behind your craft.

Electro bolt

Fires from the front of the craft. Causes a ship to stall and become difficult to control for a brief period on impact. Also causes shield energy drain. Wait until the target locks onto an enemy ship before firing

Thunder bomb

When fired, a Thunder Bomb inflicts a large shield energy drop on all visible craft

Shield

When activated, a shield protects your ship from further shield energy loss. Each shield is subject to a time limit. When a shield is activated, you can't fire another weapon but you can pick one up

Quake disruptor

Just try it. Needless to say, causes massive shield energy loss on impact and will make you laugh like an idiot for days

Super Weapons

Recent rule changes made by the F5000 internal Race Committee allow each team to develop a Super Weapon which is only available to their own pilots

Feisar mini gun

A rapid fire gun which is aimed via a cross-hair on the HUD. Once the Mini Gun has been activated, it is only available for a few seconds

AG Systems shield raider

The Shield Raider targeting system will lock onto enemy craft. It inflicts a large shield energy drop when it hits, then a missile of pure shield energy will impact with your craft, giving you an instant shield energy recharge

Auricom energy sphere

Energy Spheres fire in a straight line, damaging every enemy craft they pass through. They need to be charged up before they reach full power - this is done by holding down the B Button until the Energy Sphere on the front of your craft begins to glow. Fire the weapon by releasing the B Button. The weapon can be fired before full power is reached, but it will inflict less damage

Qirex power snare

This weapon fires from the front of the craft and shoots a long way down the track. It then creates an energy wall which causes damage to all craft flying through it. As the Power Snare is tuned to the same electromagnetic frequency as the ship which fired it, this craft will remain unharmed when flying through it

Challenge select

There are three challenge competitions to choose from, each one consisting of six individual races. You start on the first race of your chosen challenge, but you can only move up to the next race if you finish with at least a bronze award.

Awards are given depending on your race performance. The bronze award is hard to win, the silver award is really hard to win and of course, the gold award can only be achieved by supreme pilots.

When you select a challenge, you go to the relevant Challenge Screen which will give you your race objectives, race information and your current award status

RACE CHALLENGE

Race against a full field of enemy craft - some of the races will also feature weapons. The Race Challenge Screen will tell you the position in which you must finish to gain an award

TIME TRIAL CHALLENGE

This is pure racing against the clock - there are no weapons or enemy craft. All the races are single laps. The Time Trial Challenge Screen will tell you the lap time or race time you must achieve to gain an award

WEAPON CHALLENGE

Dish out some damage and destroy as many enemy craft as possible. The Weapon Challenge screen will tell you how many enemy craft you must eliminate to gain another Wipeout award

What's it all about?

NINTENDO'S dominance grows ever stronger, leading to calls for us to separate them from developing gods Rare (which we've done), and you can expect more innovations along the lines of our ground-breaking Pools competition in the near future.

This month sees a change to our regular format with a new reader dream team supplied by Mathew Workman – along with the League Tables themselves which, although the N64's still in its relative infancy, is the only guide you can trust to tell you who's got to grips with our favourite machine and who's still struggling.

Basically, those near the top are the names whose games you should be getting excited about, while the ones at the bottom should be avoided by all but those who enjoy the pain that comes with frittering away fifty quid on the gaming equivalent of a Hanson concert.

And to recap, it works like this. Each game that is released is assessed by every member of the N64 Pro team and is awarded points on a scale ranging from 3 points for a top class effort, right down to -2 points for a great steaming turd of a game. These points are then totalled up for each publisher and they will either climb or drop down the league tables accordingly.

It all works a bit like the football really, only with an ever so slightly more complex scoring system. Anyway, you should be getting the hang of it by now...

Key: R = Games Released E = Number of games rated excellent (3 points) G = Number of games rated good (1 point) A = Number of average games (0 points) S = Number of games rated shite (-2 points) Pts = Total number of pointed scored

Star Player

ISS World Cup France '98 - Rare
For the first time ISS' status as our Star Player came under threat with the emergence of Rare's new prodigy Banjo. We decided it should hang on for the time being though for two reasons. Firstly, that the new ISS is even better than the old one; and secondly, that Banjo's stamina for the long haul remains unproven.

Stats

Hall of Fame

OCEAN ARE making a bit of a charge these days, first with Wetrix and now Mission: Impossible scoring well for them and as result they move up into fourth place. F-Zero X keeps Nintendo comfortably ahead of the pack though - they're still 11 points clear of nearest challengers Acclaim - but with the challenging third parties lining up some massive releases over the next few months, Nintendo will be lucky not to have that lead slashed very soon. Watch specifically for Acclaim and Ocean putting in a spurt followed by a late surge from Konami around the turn of the year.

Hall of Shame

NOT MUCH to talk about in the shame stakes this month other than Hudson again doing themselves no favours with another appalling release - Star Soldier. Others languishing in the lower reaches were largely inactive, leading to stagnation. Athena make a debut appearance in the lower reaches in what's hopefully a false position. Dezaemon 3D scores so badly mainly due to our inability to read Japanese, and with a bit of luck any future western version will turn out to be a bit of a treat. Apart from that it's as you were down the bottom.

Overall Picture

WE'VE BROKEN down the numbers from all the games we've ever reviewed and it throws up some interesting stats indeed, most notably that we think almost 60% of all games released have been above average! And given that we're all writers and rubbish at maths you'd better enjoy them because they were a right pain to work out. And we certainly didn't print the wrong ones last issue. Oh no, definitely not...

95 GAMES:

- 22 Excellent (23.2%)
- 34 Good (35.8%)
- 21 Average (22.1%)
- 18 Shite (18.9%)
- 58.1% Above Average
- 41.9% Below Average

Reader's Dream Team

★ Matthew Workman wins a year's subscription to N64 Pro! ★

Our inaugural Reader Dream Team comes from Matthew Workman of Warrington, and we think he's done a pretty good job, so check it out. We'll be printing one every so often so if you fancy having a bash then send it in and you could soon be seeing your name up in lights. If you want to send in a photo of yourself along with it we'll print that too. Aren't we nice?

1 - NHL Breakaway - A strong and skilful goalie who combines a solid defence with moments of brilliance (that save from Pele etc.). The first keeper and looks to be staying there until someone with a bit more size comes along. Can't see it myself.

2 - Nagano Winter Olympics - An extremely clever right back gets the nod instead of the usual beefy Brits. Combines skill and passing ability, and also has the style to take out opponents. Piles of skill, brilliant use of the ball and the speed of a cheetah make this a class addition to my line-up.

3 - Extreme G - A left back in the Roberto Carlos mode. This speedy defender uses all his pace to outwit the opposition and put in great crosses for his forwards. Good passing ability and makes the tackles on all comers with incredible ease.

4 - Wetrix - A centre half who has a determined attitude and a big heart. Clever and uses the ball well but also crunches all oncomers and puny pretenders to his crown with style and comfort. Another of Man United's kids and will stay at the heart of defence for a long time.

5 - Fighters Destiny - To complete my line-up of defenders I've gone for another Man U youngster. Great battling qualities that just get better with every game. Better watch out though as MK4 is said to have a better passing game. Supported City as a kid (and rightly so).

6 - Madden 64 - A great addition to the side in the Paul Ince mould. Sits in front of the defence and stops all midfield breaks. An experienced head on his shoulders and an important player coupled with the likes of Bond.

7 - GoldenEye 007 - The playmaker and the most talented player on the field. The man with the shooting ability, the flicks and everything else that is associated with a genius. Plays the telling passes and gets back to help the defence. The star player who can create a goal from nothing.

8 - Pilotwings 64 - The midfield maestro. A quality player who is the Matti Sammer of the team. Sits back and lets other members make the tackles and do the fancy flicks, but plays all the clever passes. Brilliant brain. The cleverest player on the field links defence to midfield to attack.

9 - Diddy Kong Racing - The third striker is in the Denis Bergkamp mould in that he can score the beautiful goal as well as make the beautiful pass. Has quick bursts of speed and joins the two forwards whenever possible. Has vision, pace, power, skill and aggression. A joy to watch.

10 - Super Mario 64 - The best player ever. Well some certainly think so and I am one of them. Skillful and beautiful yet polished talent is the one thing which defenders are scared of (apart from pace, which his counterpart has plenty of). One of the stars of world football (and retail sales).

11 - ISS 64 - The one player who will never let you down. He has devastating talent and people want to play him more and more. The most complete footballer ever to grace our planet. He has speed, enthusiasm, style and charisma. He will keep his place forever (well at least until a newer model of him comes along).

Release Schedule

Featured Software House OCEAN/INFOGRAMES

THIS MONTH the spotlight falls on Manchester based Ocean and their French bedfellows Infogrames, who, as a quick glance at the Software House Leagues proves, have had no difficulty in establishing themselves as one of the N64's elite publishing outfits. Big names such as Wetrix and Mission: Impossible have got them where they are today but the Release Schedule shows quite clearly that they're not sitting back and basking in former glories. The foundations are laid and they're pressing ahead with a whole host of exciting new games.

It's difficult to pick a biggest name, but if we were to stick our necks out and pick our top tip it would probably be V Rally 64. By all accounts this racer is more than just your average PlayStation port, but it's tightly under wraps at the moment so we'll show you some pictures just as soon as we're allowed to.

Also bound to be massive are the intriguing looking Space Circus, the excellently licensed Ronaldo Soccer game and the long in development

In the coming months Ronaldo Soccer will become one of the biggest names around

Jest. Infogrames have also tied up a highly lucrative Warner Bros license which will see a whole series of games appearing on the N64. The ones announced so far are Looney Tunes: Space Race, Tasmanian Express and Duck Dodgers in the 3 1/2 Dementia, but there are plenty more planned to follow those!

All in all the future looks all the more rose for their continued support of the N64, and we say long may it continue!

Jest may be one of the lower profile releases but it's coming along nicely

The new style Release Schedule has been up and running for a few issues now with no complaints, so it looks like it'll be staying like this for the foreseeable future. We're all much happier with it now, and it seems like you lot are too. This month's featured publisher is Ocean/Infogrames, and we also pick out our most recent and imminent must have carts... STEVE

F1 World Grand Prix

The racer that the N64 deserves is almost here (vroom)... and there it goes!

If you're into driving games (and let's face it loads of you are) until now you'd have been better off buying a PSX than an N64. May I be struck down with a plague for uttering such awful blasphemy.

But let's face it, it's the truth. Until now

In whatever mode you play F1, you're guaranteed a great race

WE ALL KNOW that the N64 is the best games console on the planet. You know it. I know it. Hell, even PI**Station owners probably know it deep down. However, while arguing with your PSX owning mates about who has the best machine, you can confidently boast that the N64 has the best footy game (ISS), best 3D platform game (Mario 64 & Banjo), best shoot'em-up (Starfox 64), best Jet-ski game (Wave Race 64), best Snowboarding game (1080°) and so on and so on. But there's one genre in which the N64 comes second to the PSX, and that's driving games.

It's an embarrassing state of affairs that while Sony's 'inferior specced' machine leads the race for the best console driving game with Colin McRae, Gran Turismo and F1 '97 among the pace-setters, the N64 lags several laps behind with the likes of San Francisco Rush, Cruisin' USA and Automobili Lamborghini, with only Top Gear Rally in touch with (though still some way behind). Okay, okay so we've had cute racers a la Mario Kart and Diddy Kong Racing, but when it comes to serious car racing games, most of them have, until now, been er... well shite quite frankly.

The long and winding road

Well at long, long last the racing game that the N64 deserves has arrived. And boy has it arrived. The cart sped its way to our offices from our importers and sat there revving its meaty engine in our post game) has been replaced by a generic 'Williams' driver. Once you've chosen your driver and course you may take part in either of the five race modes, these being Exhibition Race, Grand Prix, Challenge, Time Trial and finally a two player split-screen. But more on these modes later.

F1 WGP allows you to choose between various custom setups

Graphically, the game doesn't disappoint. Admittedly, the N64's anti-aliasing routines mean that they're slightly blurred and fuzzy and lacking the razor sharp edges that you'd see on a PC game (with all its 3DFX wizardry going on) and most PSX racers. Nevertheless, despite this niggle the game still looks superb. Each of the tracks are instantly recognisable, with perfectly detailed background scenery and trackside objects, even down to accurate advertisement hoardings. And despite all the graphical detail on the scenery and the cars, plus the fact that the game tanks along at a fair old pace, there's little if any 'pop up' on any of the tracks. Compare this to most PSX racers which have buildings and objects merely yards in front of tray. And as luck would have it, yours truly was fortunate enough to get the keys and take it on its first N64 test drive. Fortunate indeed, as it transpired that Mark instead got the dubious pleasure of taking Cruisin' World for a spin.

Full clean driver's licence

F1 fans will be pleased to hear that the game makes full use of the FIA licence and so features all 17 tracks from the 1997 Grand Prix season. From the San Marino Grand Prix with its long fast straights, through to the famed street circuit of Monaco, they're all in there, and what's more they've all been lovingly recreated to the finest detail.

You can choose to race as any of the 22 drivers from the 11 teams and again these are all accurate from Damon Hill, through to Michael Schumacher and Mika Hakkinen. The only notable absence being Jacques Villeneuve, who due to licensing complications (he's apparently licensed to do his own

Track Facts

All 17 tracks from the 1997 season are included in F1 WGP. Here's a rundown of the stats for each S = Speed, C = Corner, B = Bump, G = Grip, T = Tyre, E = Engine, R = Rain. This should help you to see how best to tackle each and every one of the courses.

View to a Thrill

The game can be played from various camera angles. Several behind the car views, two in-car views (one authentic and one slightly elevated) and one full screen (ie no car in view whatsoever). All are playable, with none there simply for show (apart from the broadcast mode). It's a matter of personal preference of course, but the authentic in-car 'driver's eye' view from the cockpit (my particular favourite) is by far the most realistic I've ever experienced on any driving game. On the subject of views, the action replay system in the game, though limited (it only replays the last lap and you can't pause and replay a particular moment at will), looks superb and shows off the graphical prowess of the game brilliantly. It's so good it almost looks like a TV broadcast at times. Speaking of TV, there's also a rather nice TV broadcast option in the exhibition and Grand Prix modes. This LIVE cam lets you watch a Grand Prix taking place and allows you to view the action from almost anywhere you choose attempt to create a realistic F1 racing simulation rather than an arcade style racer. There's no powersliding or ridiculous jumps here, merely an attempt to create an F1 game that remains true to the sport, with realistic cars, handling, tracks and stats.

Unlike most driving games, that let you pelt around bends at nearly full speed, here you'll need to be disciplined enough to actually slow down at corners (now there's a novel idea). The emphasis is on realistic handling and as such you won't get very far if you drive like a maniac with your foot to the floor at all times.

Nevertheless, despite the initial difficulty and the fact that merely keeping your car on the track, rather than running off onto the gravel, or the grass, or into the track walls is tough to begin with, very soon you begin to get a feel for the way these cars handle. And the answer is that once you're used to the sensitivity of the controls and the layout of the tracks you'll find that your car handles like a dream.

you being built 'on the fly,' and you see just how impressive a job Paradigm have done here. The game can be played from various viewpoints, all of which are perfectly playable as well as looking impressive (see: View To A Thrill).

Parrot on speed

The sound too is authentic. All the sounds you'd expect to hear are in the game. From your engine noise, through to the screeching of your tyres, as well as the sound effects as you crash, or collide with roadside objects. You can also hear the roar of fellow drivers engines as you approach and pass them (or as they pass you which is initially far more likely). The game doesn't have commentary by the inimitable Murray Walker. Instead, they've made way for the occasional comments from your pit crew.

Initially I missed the Walkerisms. However, after considered opinion, I reckon the game benefits from the absence of Murray's hysterical screeching. The benefit is in the added realism. Paradigm's intention with F1 WGP was to give you the feeling that you're actually there driving an F1 car, so you wouldn't hear Murray Walker from inside your car, now would you?

Okay, so it looks and sounds realistic, but how does it handle? Well, before I answer that question let's get one thing straight. F1 WGP is first and foremost a 'sim'. It's an

Race on a particular track a few times and it becomes clear that part of the initial difficulty is to do with a lack of knowledge of the layout of each track. The problem being that until you know the courses well enough there's precious little time to react to tricky corners, chicanes and hairpin bends when you're doing 200mph and above.

As you learn each course you'll readjust for each corner accordingly as well as developing a feel for the correct racing line. You'll start to anticipate tricky bends, breaking just enough on approach and then applying the right amount of throttle to get you round corners, before slamming back on the accelerator to power out of the corner. And the driving experience is so exciting and so realistic that you'll find yourself literally swaying into the corners and leaning back in your seat as you brake.

Gentle learning curves

Thankfully though the game is well geared to help you get over the initially steep learning curve. The various game modes, as well as being entertaining in their own right have also been perfectly designed to encourage you to practice your driving skills and thus help to equip you for the challenge of taking part in a gruelling full F1 Grand Prix season.

Time Trial mode, for example, is an excellent way of learning the courses, since there's an onscreen depiction of the course map in the top corner of your screen to tell you when you're approaching a tricky bend. Plus the opportunity to race a Ghost Racer of your previous best lap time helps encourage you to constantly improve your lap times.

The Challenge Mode is extremely enjoyable with many varied challenges. But at the same time it helps to improve your skill level by forcing you to deal with typical situations which you may find yourself in during a race. And not forgetting Exhibition races ('one-off' matches in which you race on any of the 17 tracks against the rest of the grid) are of course excellent as dry runs for the real deal, the Grand Prix. And as for the Grand Prix mode itself, well that allows you to take part in a fully authentic and historically accurate F1 Grand Prix season complete with Friday and Saturday practices, qualifying and even warm-up laps.

Advanced driving courses

Pretty soon the more accomplished drivers among you will want to start upping the ante and F1 WGP offers various ways in which this can be done. The game has three difficulty levels to choose from: rookie, professional and champion. The rookie setting with its auto assisted steering and braking is for true beginners as well as the truly useless.

The professional level is less forgiving (cutting across corners and grass will see you spin out of control) and has more competitive opponents. The champion level with its seemingly impossibly twitchy cars and unforgiving handling is a real test of skill and patience, and one best left for true experts. The beauty of this game though is that it has an almost endless replayability. The game gets better and better the more you play it, as of course do you.

In addition to the skill levels, there are various other options which can be toggled to affect the difficulty and level of realism of the game, with damage being the most obvious one. Switch this on and your car is no longer a dodgem, but a fragile piece of machinery which must be handled carefully or else you'll suffer the consequences. ## F1 World Grand Prix

Challenge Mode

One of F1 WGP's best features is its challenge mode. Similar to the scenario mode in ISS, the game puts you in a real life situation from the 1997 season and requires you to take up the challenge (see screenshots below). Challenges are divided into three categories: offence, defence and trouble, with typical tasks including one in which your brakes are failing and you need to still place a respectable finish. For each challenge successfully completed you are awarded a points score dependant on how well you did and this score is saved as a percentage which goes toward your overall skill level

One of the trickiest bends in Monaco is this one just ahead

In this two player head to head Player one is in big trouble

the race track will all have adverse affects on your car's damage level. Warning lights in your cockpit will warn you of these vital damage areas and if and when you'll need to pit in to rectify them. Once features such as damage and weather are turned on (and especially on the longer races), pit stops become a major feature of the game, along with all the tactical decisions they involve such as which tyres to put on, how much fuel to take onboard etc.

Forecast: heavy downforce

Before you begin each race you are shown the track layout and told the weather conditions and have the option to alter your car's set-up according to them and of course the number of laps over which you intend to race. Beginners will usually dispense with these and simply dive straight in, but it soon becomes clear that there are advantages to getting your set-up just right for the particular track and conditions (e.g. on the Monaco track with all its twists and bends you'll do well to increase the downforce on the front of your car thus enabling tighter turns). Through trial and error (usually very costly errors) you'll eventually start to learn which car set-ups work best on which tracks and in which weather conditions.

Yet another of F1 WGP's brilliant features is it's 97 events option. How many F1 fans wouldn't jump at the chance of taking part in a recreation of an actual GP from the 97 season? Well now you can. Toggle '97 Events' to ON and it means that all the races you take part in will be historically accurate and in keeping with the events at the time. This includes both the weather and any specific events including when drivers dropped out of the race.

So if, for example, Schumacher spun out (while in the wet) on the 10th lap of the Australian Grand Prix in 1997, he'll do so again. This is an extremely clever feature and one which F1 fans are bound to go nuts over. And like all the best ideas, it's so simple you wonder why nobody thought of doing it before. One thing's certain, it's a feature that loads of people are bound to copy from here on in.

Racing a la mode

While we're on the subject of excellent features (since F1 WGP has literally tons of them), the game boasts a two player 'one-on-one' split-screen mode (split either vertically or horizontally) which despite lacking a full grid, is actually extremely entertaining. One-on-one races are competitive and tactical affairs, particularly if you play with damage over eight laps or more and so necessitate the use of tactical pit stops to repair and refuel your car.

I could go on and on, but this is only a mere six page review and I've run out of both time and space and I'm in serious danger of running off on the final bend if I don't slow down as I near the finishing straight. So I'll say it very slowly. YOU... MUST... OWN... THIS... GAME!

Buy F1 WGP if you have any interest in driving games and simply enjoy exciting, hugely challenging, and amazingly realistic handling race games, because that's what this is. You MUST buy it if you're an F1 nut who's after THE definitive F1 racing sim, because again, that's what this is. But most of all buy it just to prove to all those PI**Station owners just who really does have the best console on the planet. PI**Station. Pah! ●

STAMP OF APPROVAL

REALISM is a word bandied about all too often in video games. But for once, such claims are perfectly valid. The cars all look and handle realistically, even the computer AI of the other cars is (by and large) spot on. The way you gradually improve your times on each course, pushing your car further and further to its limits, learning exactly when, where and by how much to apply the brakes, feels just how you'd expect it to and is enormously satisfying. As is the very real feeling that your car is a fragile piece of equipment that will break if you don't drive carefully. Loads of graphical touches help to add realism and as for the in-car view, that's got to be as realistic as it gets without actually sitting on Damon Hill's lap during a Grand Prix. Get yourself a wheel, and rumble pak, and never mind sitting on his lap, you are Damon Hill. NOELY

● ALEX Can't fault it. It looks as though my pleas for it to get 100% have fallen on deaf ears though. Must have been the hair getting in the way. Still, six percent short of perfection isn't bad from such a stingy rotter as Noely

● STEVE Think Noely's getting a bit carried with all this realism talk. After all, if F1 World GP was truly realistic it'd be about as exciting as a party at Mark's house. And it's not. It's top speed, top class racing action all the way!

● MARK Thanks Steve! Anyway, this is as good an F1 Racing game as you'll ever see. The graphics are awesome and the handling's better than any other N64 racer so far. If you're into F1 then you should definitely get this game

● READER REVIEW Much better than F1 97 in my opinion, although PI**Station owners will still blindly insist that it isn't. Brilliantly playable and endlessly replayable. Buy it! Andrew Heather, Darlington

Cruis'n World

Oh No! Not another Cruis'n Game!

Testimony to Nintendo's faith in this racer or just a plain bad idea? Cruis'n USA earns a sequel

Driving through London and trying not to hit the buses

There's a traffic jam in the tunnel as I try to get the lead

The Sardine Extreme takes first as it tears down the track

Cruis'n World has many problems, but by far the biggest is that this is the sequel to one of the most loathed N64 games ever. Cruis'n USA was the original paceless racer, consisting of little more than a five minute leisurely drive across the good ol' US of A with the biggest danger being falling asleep behind your control pad.

For those lucky few that escaped the original, I'll fill you in on the details. Cruis'n World is a road racing game that bears a striking similarity to the old Sega classic Out Run. You choose a car from a selection of speedsters and race along roads with other traffic. So there's a good chance that you'll meet an oncoming car head on and the crashes come fast and frequently. Good idea, but the original was such a badly designed game that every good element was lost within a sea of murky horribleness.

It's still a beast

Fortunately, Cruis'n World is a marked improvement on its predecessor. The big question is how much better does this game have to become before it stops smelling like a rancid festering beast? Quite a way it would seem!

So what's different then? Well for starters the graphics have been improved. In fact, this is quite a good-looking little game. The tracks are highly detailed and everything moves with a silky smoothness. Steve took one look at it and said (in his best Manc accent) "there's a lot of undulation, init." After sneaking a look at the well-thumbed office dictionary, I worked out what he meant. The tracks have a lot of movement to them. Rather than the flat straights of a game like GT 64, these tracks have little kinks and hollows as you head up and down hills, around bends and through tunnels.

Bimbo racing

Cruis'n World may not be realistic, but at least the controls work this time around. There's also new bonus moves such as flipping your car onto two wheels to get round those tight bends and narrow gaps; powersliding around corners and a turbo wheelie that lets you jump over other cars. You can even pull stunts by turbo jumping ramps, which gives you bonus time that become vital to shave seconds off your lap times.

Unfortunately, Cruis'n World still has enough of the old Cruis'n USA in it to stop the game from actually being good. The graphics may be okay, but there still isn't any impression of speed and instead of being a mad racer, this game's just a bore. It may not be over in five minutes, but the time still drags every second you play it.

Another problem is that the races are still completely random. You can tear away in first place, hit an oncoming car on the last bend and

Drivers! Start your engines....

The ATV is big and packs a machine gun

The Banzai GTV is fast, but lacks turning power

The Serpent is a good all rounder with top steering

The Hind 4x4 is good for the off-road courses

The Kamikaze 4WD has excellent control

The Orca is the fastest car. It's also my choice

The Road King is good for trashing your opponents

Stop Laughing! This is one of the best cars

lose. Then you replay the race, crash all the way through and end up in first place. You never feel like your getting better, you just play the game in the hope that the odds will eventually fall your way.

And it still has a lot of the terrible, cheesy graphics from the original. The heavy metal rocker and badly drawn girls are still hanging around the finish line where you immediately freeze instead of being able to run them over. Which brings me to the most damning criticism about Cruis'n World. The original game was mildly popular in the arcades for one reason only, you could run things over whilst tearing happily along. In the arcade version of Cruis'n USA, cows on the road got a thick ear, and by rights Cruis'n World should have a wide variety of protected species denting the front of your car.

Roadkill is fun

No, I'm not sick! I just recognise that a lot of the enjoyment people got from the arcade game was a result of cartoon cows getting dismembered on screen. But the bumper fodder is surprisingly absent from both the N64 versions of Cruis'n USA and Cruis'n World, and as a result the game just isn't any fun. Nintendo didn't want to put a warning on the box and as a consequence I have to warn you not buy this game.

If you enjoyed Cruis'n USA (and a lot of people bought it), then you'll be happy with this (and may God have mercy upon your soul). It's certainly a lot better than Off-Road Challenge, but personally I'll be steering well clear of Cruis'n World ●

The Road King takes to the air after hitting the curved beetle

N64 Score

WHILST NOT QUITE the product of Satan that the original was, this is still far from being good. The graphics are one area in which this has seen a major improvement and most of the problems from Cruis'n USA have been ironed out. However, this gloss only serves to highlight the fact that the original game wasn't just bad because of its sloppy design, it was just plain dull. This cruise is so boring that you feel your life force being sapped out of you whilst you plod along. You stare at the clock and wonder how much time you've wasted meandering through the different courses. The gameplay is totally random, sometimes you win, sometimes you lose and I didn't really care either way. Go for San Francisco Rush if you're after a fun racer or F1 World Grand Prix if you're after a more serious affair, just be sure to avoid this. MARK

● ALEX Not as bad as Off-Road Challenge, but then that's not saying much is it? All three Cruis'n games have been dumped in my opinion and it's time to stop making them. Three strikes and Cruis'n USA should be out for good

● STEVE I seemed to like this more than the rest of the team. Although it's not brilliant, it is a bit of fun and the graphics are quite good. If you have fond memories of Out Run you should take a look at this

● NOEL Mark certainly seems to draw the short straw when it comes to reviews. While I've been enjoying the joys of F1 WGP, poor Mark has been left to toil over this dross. While this isn't as bad as Off Road, it's still dull and boring

● READER REVIEW I liked this more than the rest of the team. The graphics are quite good and I enjoyed driving through the different countries. It's better than you'd think! David Goodwin, London

Let's face it, we didn't expect this to be much cop and so the end result isn't a surprise. After making one of the worst driving games ever (Cruis'n USA), Midway have done themselves proud by making a sequel that's even worse. Well done, lads!

But before I start hammering nails into this games coffin, I'll tell you a bit about it. You pick one of eight off-road vehicles ranging from a dune buggy up to massive monster trucks. You can then either do a straight race or pick the challenge mode and race the courses in order. You get money for winning races and can spend it upgrading your car. So the better you do in the races the better your car becomes.

Racing nightmare

There's only one positive thing about this game and that's the amount of movement going on in the backgrounds. As you poodle along in your truck you smash through billboards, jump over trains and watch jets shoot down flying saucers. And it's all interactive. I took one jump too high and hit a bi-plane passing overhead, which promptly blew up scattering pieces all over the road causing other trucks to hurtle around and crash into each other. If only these little tricks were in a better game I'd be more than happy.

But these tricks are in a lousy version of a game that a year ago got a panning for being utter rubbish. So from this point on my review's going to turn nasty as I reach for my hammer and nails in

The car doesn't have much traction on this sand road

nge

I'll have to speed up if I want to overtake those two cars

the hope that I can seal this game in its casket and chuck it down a deep, deep hole (where it'll hopefully never see the light of day again.)

When it comes to bad graphics this game has a full house and is screaming bingo at the top of its voice. Witness the badly drawn sprites, gaze when they fall over and observe how everything is completely flat like a set of cheap stage props, marvel at the sheer ugliness caused by the blurry dithering and gasp at the incredible amount of pop-up that causes mountains to miraculously appear right in front of your eyes. Above all, try to make sure that somebody else owns the cart that you're looking at.

Jerking me around

And if the graphics aren't bad enough for you then try the frame rate. It's so jerky that it gives you a migraine. Imagine playing a game in a darkened room with a strobe light flashing in your face, and that's just the one player. Take a look at the two player to give yourself a fit.

If you try to steer off-road then you're immediately bounced back on course. So it's not even an off road game, more a twitchy version of Cruis'n USA with badly drawn trucks instead of cars driving along dirt tracks instead of roads.

Then there's the small matter of gameplay, or rather, the complete and utter lack of it. You bounce along the tracks holding down the joystick trying to steer whilst endlessly smashing through everything in sight. Mindless mayhem sounds okay in theory, but you soon find that this game is just a bit too mindless and the novelty wears painfully thin. Trust me, you'll get sick of playing this Off Road Challenge sooner rather than later.

Please! Take it away

I couldn't help but feeling I wasn't playing a game, instead I was taking part in an endurance test to see how long it would be before I pulled the cart out of the N64 and stamped up and down on it. All in all, this is one of the most terrible games I've ever seen in my life.

It's been almost a year since the appalling Cruis'n USA and yet Off-Road Challenge still manages to come in last in the poor driving games award, which is no small feat. For everybody's sake, please don't buy this game and hopefully Nintendo won't allow another one to be made. I don't relish the thought of ever having to review a Cruis'n-style game ever again ● manages the impossible, it takes the ingredients from the least impressive racing game on the N64 (Cruis'n USA) removes anything remotely positive about it (and that wasn't much) and spits out a game so foul it deserves to be flushed straight down the toilet. I can't believe Nintendo ever allowed a game this poor to be released. The graphics are truly appalling and would look shameful on a P1**Station let alone the N64. It's so jerky that you start to think there's a problem with your machine, except the only problem here is the sloppy programming and bad game design. Be very grateful you've read this review before buying this game. Just make sure you don't end up owning a copy of Off-Road Challenge, as you'll regret ever putting the cart in your beloved N64. This doesn't deserve to sell a single copy. MARK

● ALEX Let's face it you'd have to be pretty foolish to choose this over something like F1 World Grand Prix. The aforementioned is mint whereas this is rubbish. Go for any other N64 racing game and you'll still end up better off

● STEVE This is filth from start to finish. Not that I've seen the actual finish - I'm not stupid enough to play it anywhere for anywhere near that long. It's worse than Cruis'n USA, and I didn't think that was even possible

● NOELY I can't think of a single reason why anyone would want to play this game. If I had rented it I'd feel ripped off, if I had bought it then suicide would begin to look like a very real option. Another -2 league points for GT methinks

ChoroQ 64

This job can be quite depressing at times you know...

Micro Machines meets Mario Kart in Takara's debut N64 release, but unfortunately the offspring is a little on the funny looking side, with the kind of face only a mother could love

It doesn't look all that much, and to be honest, it isn't

The snowy settings make the cars even harder to drive

You can upgrade your vehicle in the shop between races, but the language barrier makes it a bewildering task

If charging around in a milk float's your thing, you'll love it

This should never see the light of day outside Japan. I'll tell you that for nothing (well, £2.95 unless you're reading this in the shop, in which case I'll tell you to get your hand in your pocket and buy N64 Pro, this isn't a library book). But unfortunately THQ have taken it on and will release it in the UK as Penny Racers.

It's not that it's all that bad – as obscure Jap games go this is probably towards the top end of the scale – but have you ever heard of ChoroQ? No, neither had I, but apparently it's a long running craze over there of the kind that our Eastern friends seem a little too susceptible to. They're mini toy cars (like Micro Machines, but not quite so micro) and the Japs just can't get enough of them (see Mini Mania for a closer look).

Stunted-car racers

I imagine that any sales ChoroQ manages to pick up will be largely influenced by such a popular license. So the burden of no brand awareness outside of Japan could prove too great for it to bear on its ever so weak shoulders.

I'd like to say that's a shame, but I can't because I couldn't recommend this to anyone not already obsessed with ChoroQ. It has to be said that large amounts of Japanese text make this quite unplayable to my linguistically uneducated mind, so I may be missing out on numerous gameplay revelations, but I doubt it.

ChoroQ 64 is a fast, clean looking car-based racer that seems to have successfully combined the look of Mario Kart with that of Motortoon GP. The result is a colourful game with very little fog and a fairly distant horizon. As you would expect, there are a number of courses and multi player support via split-screen.

Apparently, there's been a PlayStation version which is pretty much identical in looks and gameplay, although there have been a few new camera angles chucked into the Nintendo 64 version to make it a bit different. They've also included a course editor which you've got absolutely no chance of figuring out, unless you're Japanese.

Micro Mania ChoroQ's not just some imaginary name like F-Zero, the game is actually licensed from a hugely popular range of toy cars only the obsessive Japanese nature has made them unbelievably collectable, with people paying ludicrous sums for that. Check a few out anyway and see if they tickle your fancy...

Matchbox Mario

It not only looks like Mario Kart, it plays a lot like it too, with the classic SNES game obviously being a major influence on the game's development. The power slide has been replaced by a ridiculous roll that's activated either by pressing the shoulder or simply trying to corner too fast. Don't be mislead though, ChoroQ 64 doesn't really deserve to even be mentioned in the same sentence as Mario Kart, I'm just using it to illustrate a point.

What you have here is a nice-ish looking race game (it's bright and colourful, actually looks better than F-Zero X in my opinion – although that's not too difficult – but certainly not up to N64 standards) that plays alright in a sort of so-soish kind of a way. In fact, everything about it is a bit 'ish' to be honest. Nothing stands out from the crowd, and considering that the sheer number of average N64 racers, it's a crowd that it's all too easy to get lost in.

Too little, too late

I'm sure that were I Japanese this would be scoring somewhere in the low seventies. However, I have to assume that, like me, the majority of our readers will struggle to get a great deal of enjoyment thanks to ChoroQ's bewildering 'foreignness,' and therefore I have to settle on a much lower score.

Although this is an admirable first effort from Takara, it really shouldn't be bought by anyone outside of Japan, and any import shop foolish enough to import it in large quantities will no doubt make an unhealthy loss on this title. There's probably a good little game in there struggling against overwhelming odds to get out, unfortunately, the little that we can get to see of it is nowhere near enough ●

Power-ups will play a large part in your success

There are a large number of ChoroQ's to choose from

Stay on the road if you can. Water slows you down

You can roll your car at will to help you get round corners from Japan. A lot like Penny Racers or Micro Machines in many ways, elusive rare edition. Can't see what all the fuss is about myself.

N64 Score

THIS IS ANOTHER case of wait and see. ChoroQ might turn out alright when released in an English format, but even then I can't see it hauling itself above the ranks of distinctly average. When the competition includes the likes of Diddy Kong Racing, F-Zero X and the new N64 Pro office favourite, F1 World Grand Prix, it's doubtful that there's any room for an obscure Japanese licensed racer in the lives of all but the most avid (and in this case, sad) gamers. I'm not having a dig at Takara because I'm sure that Japanese fans of real ChoroQ will get into it, and they're obviously the audience the game is aimed at. All I'm saying is that should you wander into your local games importer, pick this off the shelf and think, 'that looks nice,' then you should think again, because if you don't resist the temptation, you will regret it. Guaranteed. STEVE

● ALEX This reminds me of Penny Racers on the PI**Station, which isn't a surprise as I've just seen THQ's N64 incarnation and apart from the PAL version having English text, it's exactly the same as ChoroQ! Oh dear...

● MARK This might be okay (but not good) once an English text version appears. But even then this won't be as much fun as Diddy Kong Racing or Mario Kart 64. I'll be steering well clear of ChoroQ and I suggest you do the same

● NOELY The name sounds like some bland art package or business program. And to be honest, you'd probably have more fun getting your mates round to sit round and sort out your accounts than play this garish Mario Kart rip-off

● READER REVIEW This is quite good fun for a while. I'm glad they are doing a conversion though because it's too hard to follow what's going on at the moment

WWF Warzone

Warzone... where real men wear skirts and skimpy leotards

Faarooq attempts to help The Undertaker clear his throat

Faarooq looks in pain while his teammate Bulldog dishes it out

Create your own Wrestler/Freak

WWF Warzone's Create a Wrestler option is an excellent feature that allows you to design your own wrestler and save him to memory. Everything from name, gender, attributes, personality, theme music, skin colour and type, body parts, and costumes can all be altered. And with literally tons of choices within each category, it's possible to make a wrestler who looks just as mean or as camp as you want them to.

Let's face it, there's more chance of Julian Clary and Dale Winton injuring each other in a catfight than the wrestlers in these so called WWF fights coming to any harm

Nevertheless, despite this obvious fact, wrestling is big, big business both on TV and in computer games. There's no shortage of people willing to watch hours of farcical bouts between a bunch of muscle-bound gorillas all prancing about like fairies in a ring.

The problem I have with wrestling games is that like the actual TV shows they mimic, they're pseudo-fun for a while. However, the gameplay tends to be fairly simple and repetitive and of the kind that you'll quickly tire of as bouts degenerate into frantic button pushing episodes. While such games are fun and fairly entertaining in the short-term, those looking for a little more depth, subtlety and skill should look elsewhere.

So what's so different about WWF Warzone then? Well, firstly it looks so much better than any other wrestling game there's ever been. I went back and had a quick look at WCW vs NOW, a game that received a reasonable (80ish) score in our very own mag. Although it received a perfectly adequate mark of FOOUURRRish for the graphics, that game's blocky polygonal graphics look positively primitive compared with the silky visuals in WWF Warzone.

Assault and flattery

What with NFL QB Club, NHL Breakaway, and All Star Baseball, Acclaim's Sports games are increasingly leading the way when it comes to realistic looks. Well the graphics here are every bit as realistic (if not more so). Ignore the fact that the game doesn't have the flashy FMV opening that you'd get on a PI**Station game. Ironically, each wrestler's introduction into the ring, from behind a row of fireworks (and projected on a large TV wall) is crudely done and is probably the least impressive part of the entire game. That aside, WWF Warzone's visuals cannot be faulted.

The game features 18 (inc two hidden) of the WWF's most noteworthy wrestlers, all of which are large, extremely detailed and instantly recognisable from their real-life counterparts. From 'Stone Cold' Steve Austin and Shawn Michaels, through to The Undertaker and Goldust, all your favourites are here. In fact the N64 version boasts an extra wrestler, Shamrock, not found in the PI**Station version. Ooh! won't that just 'piss them off' no end. Heh, heh!

The game boasts realistic motion-captured routines taken from over 300 actual wrestling moves and holds. Although each of the characters is made of polygons, Acclaim have employed a rather clever 'skin' technique to hide them. The skin wraps around the polygonal frame of each wrestler, ensuring that the wrestler's have 'baby bum' smooth skins. But this is not merely a cosmetic improvement. The effect of this skin routine is to make each of the wrestlers appear more solid, realistic and altogether believable than the glitchy characters normally found in games of this type.

Suck it and see

In addition to the impressive visuals, the sounds in Warzone easily surpass anything that's gone before. There's some very realistic, if a little repetitive, commentary from Jim Ross and Vince McMahon. If ▶

Real Men Wear Skirts apparently, just ask a Scotsman

No not the Bionic Man, that's 'Stone Cold' Steve Austin

As these two grapple Faarooq heads for the turnbuckle

▶ you're a wrestling fan, those names will mean something to you and so you'll know what to expect from them. If, however, like me you'd never heard of them before, then let me tell you that you can expect some excellent overly dramatic comments such as "The Undertaker can't shake the cobwebs off" or the classic "He's in dreamland" when your player has been stunned.

When the wrestlers are punched, thrown and kicked about the ring, all the action is accompanied by some realistic grunts, groans, crashes and moans and throughout the fights the crowd make their allegiances known. They'll yell and scream for whoever they want to win and will boo to show their dissatisfaction at anyone who resorts to the one bland move (ie continually punching etc.) in an attempt to win the match by default. I believe the correct technical name for this is 'doing a Stench.'

Soundwise, Warzone's crowning glory has to be the way each of the wrestlers can goad their opponent with their own unique taunt. These are usually quite comical with some of my favourites being Faarooq's "Don't make me put my foot up your arse," Shawn Michaels' subtle "I'm gonna dance all over your face" to Triple H's questionable "Two Words - Suck It!"

Grievous Bodily Ham

There's nothing better than beating the shite out of an opponent before backing off and hurling a torrent of abuse. You can watch with glee as their temper rises and they charge blindly back into the fray, only for you to repeat the thrashing.

With fewer than 20 wrestlers, WWF Warzone could be accused of being a bit of a lightweight, especially when compared with WCW vs NWO's 45. However, I've not even mentioned the game's Create a Wrestler feature yet, which allows you to create your very own mauler. This is a superb feature that's bound to appeal to wrestling nuts. Also, since up to 30 of your players can be saved to your memory pak and added to your league, it's a feature that adds considerably not only to the novelty value, but also to the longevity and replayability of the game.

Once you've chosen your wrestler (whether custom or realistic) it's time to get on in the ring and fight. The game features loads of game modes. The challenge is the main one player game. Here you get to pick a fighter with whom you take on (and hopefully beat) all comers in a championship type mode.

Interspersed within this action you'll be challenged to fight in various grudge matches. These feuds or 'gimmick' matches are just as hammy and overly dramatic as they are when seen on TV, but at least they are in keeping with the general over-the-top absurdity of the sport.

There's a versus mode, where 1-4 players can take each other on in an every-man-for-themselves contest. A tag team mode, which is self explanatory. And wrestling nuts will be pleased to hear that there's also a cage mode, weapons mode, Royal Rumble, Gauntlet (which is exclusive to N64 owners) and last, but not least, there's even a rather nifty training mode.

But surely there's no need for a training mode in a wrestling game is there? Aren't they just a question of repeatedly bashing buttons until someone's declared the winner? Well, while cynics might argue that that has been true until now. That's certainly not the case with WWF Warzone, or at least it's not the full story.

Basically, Warzone's combat system is based on a Streetfighter-esque sequence of button presses. So, for example, to perform Steve

Stone Cold was jubilant when his mum managed to find his favourite black undies

Austin's Brain Buster (press Right, Right, Punch). Now to a certain extent this is an excellent idea. Once mastered the system allows for a much greater level of skill since it requires you to learn particular moves and the timing to pull them off. Indeed, this is a brilliant way to learn the wrestlers' moves.

However, while I preferred Warzone's attempt to shift to a more skilled and tactical combat system, it's not without its flaws. Admittedly, once you master the controls and become more skilled at a character's moves, it's possible to pull off fancy manoeuvres when fighting against the CPU. But the trouble is that the skilled player can still find themselves on the end of a beating from a novice player who just repeatedly bashes the buttons.

Stone Cold Stunner

This is especially the case with more than two opponents in the ring when fights frequently degenerate into chaotic melees of fisticuffs and there's no room to pull off your DDT's, or Back Breaker's or whatever. While this can be frustrating for those who are used to more skilled fighting games, it's worth remembering that at the end of the day this is still a wrestling game and as such the emphasis is on multi player fun, and over-the-top theatrics. Which is just as well, since it's very hard to take muscle-bound men in leotards very seriously ●

Goldust takes out this girly skirt wearing bird err bloke

As in real life, bouts often take place outside the ring

N64 Score

NOT ONLY IS WWF Warzone the best looking and sounding wrestling game on the N64, it also plays the best. The control system is a definite step in the right direction as far as I'm concerned, and if built upon this is the kind of thing that will win over non-wrestling fans. There're enough fun game modes, such as the Royal Rumble and Cage mode, to satisfy the most ardent grapple nuts and multi player free-for-alls are a good laugh (if a tad over chaotic). The custom wrestler is a brilliant addition that's bound to be copied. All in all, if there was a fight between WWF Warzone and WCW vs NWO, after much posturing and yelled threats, the outcome would ultimately be a clear victory for the Acclaim title. Expect THQ to return for a grudge match with the sequel to WCW, but for now Warzone is easily the best wrestling game on the N64. NOELY

● ALEX Unbelievably I quite enjoyed this as I'm no great fan of wrestling. The kit editor is particularly hilarious as are some of the bone-crunching special moves. Not a mindless tap tap press-fest, either, which is a change

● STEVE I got more enjoyment out of the creation bit than I did from the actual wrestling, but then beat'em-ups have never really been my thing. This is nice enough though, and just about better than THQ's previous effort

● MARK Better than the WCW vs. NWO, but still not perfect. This looks the business, but the gameplay relies far too much on memorising complex combos and it's a bit hard to get into at first. A good game for the fans

● READER REVIEW The best wrestling game I've played and I've played a few. I love the way you can customise your own player and enter them into the game. Brilliant! George Postenby, Brighton

Buck Bumble

It's the attack of the killer bee in this brand new shoot'em-up

I'm using a self-guided missile to take out the enemy

At times the amount of detail in the garden is great

Feast your bee-dy eyes on this. A bee with a bad attitude (Bee A Baracus?) is on the N64 and is ready to kick ass with a wide boy selection of guns. Will this be the bee-st shoot'em-up ever? Read on...

The explosions are spectacular when you use the big guns

Notice how the weapons strap on to Buck's body

Good ol' puns mixing bees with the letter B, I could go on like this all day. Alright, alright I get the point, I'll stop the bee-related humour and get on with the review of the game.

Buck Bumble (BB) is (in case you've had a mental black-out and have already forgotten) a bee. This is no ordinary bee though, he's a veteran who's been genetically enhanced and had military equipment surgically implanted. In other words, he's one big mean bee with guns strapped to his legs.

You take control of Buck and fight against The Herd (a bunch of chemically altered insects who've mutated thanks to a poisonous chemical spill). The Herd is taking over and they're hell bent on destroying the environment and everything in it. so it's up to Buck to go out and smash the evil insects into oblivion.

Buzz if you like...

BB's a shoot'em-up which squares off against some pretty stiff competition on the N64. With Lylat Wars, Forsaken, Quake and the almighty GoldenEye all asking you to go out and buy them does Buck Bumble have what it takes to get you to put your hands in your pockets and part with your cash? Well I don't really think it does to be honest, but that's not to say it's a truly bad game, so I'll let you know what's good about it first.

I actually like the idea behind BB. It's novel to say the least and in a genre dominated by space ships and Doom-cloned first-person shooters, it's nice to see a game that takes the oldest type of video game (arguably the first ever videogame was a shoot'em-up) and gives it a new slant.

The design is good as well. Buck is nicely drawn and animated as you watch him wander around on the surface before leaping up into the air to fly around. His weapons are attached to his legs, so you are always able to see the firepower available. The levels are cleverly designed with huge playing areas that really give you the feeling of being a tiny bee roaming around a huge garden.

Bee-Bee-guns

The weapons are also very impressive. As well as the standard guns, shotguns and machine-guns there's some interesting machinery to play around with. You get the HGS, which scatters green pods in front of you, then promptly home in on your enemies and knock them for six. There's also a homing missile which is great for taking out fast moving targets.

When you fire the manual control missile the view switches to the missile and you steer it with the control pad. It's pretty tricky to get it to hit anything smaller than a house, but with practice you can use them to knock out land-based targets from around corners with immense satisfaction.

There're plenty of items to pick up as you fly around, including bonus items, power-ups and drops of nectar attached to the underneath of flowers. These replenish your energy after being attacked by the herd.

As well as shooting The Herd and picking up items, you have to navigate the level by shooting switches that open doors. In true Doom-fashion these aren't always next to the door they open, so you have to search for the switches. One idea that I do like is that the switches are connected to the doors by a metal pipe. When you shoot a switch the pipe starts to explode. Follow the explosions and they'll lead you back to the door that will open. Anyone who's spent ages wandering around Doom searching for the door that a switch just opened will welcome this idea. I know I did!

Sticky situations

The controls work well in some instances, but pretty badly in others. You use the control stick to move around like an aeroplane with the A button thrusting you forwards. Press the B button and you'll brake to a hover, press both you'll rise vertically or let go and you'll fall to the ground below. It's a bit tricky at first to get to grips with, but with practice you become quite adept at moving around the levels.

Although the control system is well thought out, the actual control of Buck varies between good and frustrating. It can be difficult to pick up items, especially if you inadvertently pass them by. You have to stop, hover around, move to face the item and try to grab it without missing it again. The only other way is to tear forwards and try to grab it by swooping down.

The problem is that the items are too small and the margin for error is high, so you often end up missing them and either give up on them or stop and mess around trying to pick it up. It's all very well if nothing is happening at the same time, but if you stop when the other insects are attacking, then you'll just end up getting blasted whilst trying to pick up that special weapon.

Burn, ba-bee, burn

Shooting down the enemies seems to be a bit of a problem as well. Everything's fairly small and quick moving, so aiming can be a real pain. The enemies (especially the wasps) tend to get behind you very quickly, so some sharp shooting is required to pick them off. Fortunately you can loop-the-loop to get behind the enemies and shoot them in the backside. But still, I can't help feeling disappointed at the actual shooting aspects of this

Another enemy bites the bullet from my

Wasps keep coming out of that generator. I aim up and fire

game (which is a bit of a problem for a shoot'em-up). It seems quite tame compared to the mania of Lylat Wars and certainly requires a lot less skill and ruthless guile than the classic GoldenEye.

The graphics are also less impressive than by rights an N64 game should be. Although everything is nicely designed, the levels don't seem to have enough detail to them, the enemies are too small for you to ever really appreciate them and worst of all, there's a huge amount of fogging being used to cover up the backgrounds.

Now you could (if you really wanted to) convince yourself that all that fog is the early morning mist gently rolling across the garden. But if you're nasty and cynical like me, then you'll just put it down to BB not been as well programmed as other N64 games.

Don't get stung

It's a shame because there's some good ideas going on in BB, but they just don't make it. Mainly because the graphical engine isn't powerful enough to do everything the designers are asking it to do.

Buck Bumble doesn't have enough blast in it to cut it with the big boys of N64 gaming. Compared to Lylat Wars (its nearest competitor) this comes in as a tame second best. And when you've ripped apart enemy Pion-Cycles in Forsaken or picked off Russians in GoldenEye, floating around a foggy garden just isn't the same ●

N64 Score

THIS HAS TURNED OUT to be a bit of a disappointment.

When I saw it in development it showed a lot of promise, but the end result is a barely above average shoot'em-up. The idea is nice and I love the idea of fighting as a tiny bee floating around a huge garden. The design of Buck and the bad guys is also good and even the levels are well thought out. But the main problem is the graphics engine, which isn't really up to scratch and the game has an awful lot of fogging obscuring the screen. I'd like to say the game itself makes up for the graphics, but it doesn't. Buck Bumble is an average shoot'em-up which offers very little in the way of excitement. It's a nice try, but it really doesn't cut it when compared to the graphical finesse of games like Forsaken and Lylat Wars. Definitely take a look at this before buying to make sure it really is for you. MARK

● ALEX One of those great concepts that hasn't really come to fruition, like Tetrisphere for example. Plenty of work has gone into the plot, the music and the scenarios, but not enough attention has been given to the gameplay

● STEVE It's surprising that such an experienced team can come up with nonsense like this. They really haven't got to grips with the hardware at all, and this needed at least another six months work to be even close. Shame

● NOELY The fogging in this makes the settings in Turok look like a clear summer's day. On a brighter note, this is quite an original idea, however the execution lets this down. Don't be stung by forking out your bucks for Bumble

● READER REVIEW The amount of fog on this game is horrible and at times the screen just fills up with grey. I'd choose Lylat Wars over this. The music's good though

Rakuga Kids

Possibly the weirdest beat'em-up ever made

Parappa The Rappa meets Clayfighter and the end result is a very odd affair. But does its strangeness hide a stunning game or is this a weak fighter that relies on visual tomfoolery to hide its poor performance? Read on to find out...

Use dobbin the pantomime wonder horse special attack

Two heads are better than one. Unless one's a chicken that is

W

HEN THIS first came in I misheard Steve talking about a new beat'em-up called "Ragu Kids." My mind was immediately filled with strange images of chubby Italians eating spag' bol' and slogging it out on the office N64.

And you know how it is when you can't get a thought out of your head, so I quickly offered to review this game in the hope that it wouldn't be too weird. And although there isn't a strand of spaghetti in sight, the truth is far more bizarre than my imaginary pasta sauce fuelled fighter.

Despite being quite a simple game, Rakuga Kids is incredibly hard to describe. Imagine Clayfighter, now remove all the characters and replace them with Japanese Manga-style kids drawn in flat Parappa-style and you're getting quite close to the mark.

Take, for example, Marsha, she's a fighting girl who uses her hair as a defensive shield and attacks with the aid of the chicken that's stuck on her head. Then there's Cools Roy, who looks like a cross between Robin Hood and Roy Rodgers and uses his red cape to lure a bull into running over his hapless opponents. Or Captain Cat who's a baseball-cap wearing cat who changes into a seventies DJ complete with funky shaking maracas.

You don't have to be mad

The list goes on and on and every time you press a button something completely and utterly insane happens. It's as though the programmers walked into a mental asylum armed with a crayon and some paper and said, "Hey, you look completely off your face! Why don't you design us a game then."

Having said all that, I must admit to liking the design. It's quirky and different and the fact that so much is happening on the screen makes this one of the liveliest games I've played in a long time. The graphics are actually quite good, but the fact that everything is in paper flat 2D does

DDJ uses his speaker attack to knock Astroboy around

Astroboy uses his rocket laser attack to build a spaceship out

Use your special attack when the coloured bars are full up

You can do special moves like shooting your opponents make it look a bit stale when compared to a 3D beat-em-up. The graphic design is similar to Yoshi's Story, in that it has a painted look rather than the crisp clear design that you find in most games.

Gameplay wise, things aren't quite so rosy. Rakuga Kids plays a lot like Clayfighter (in fact they're very similar games). Clayfighter got an absolute panning from the N64 Pro team and for good reason. So technically I should also rip Rakuga Kids apart, but I don't want to. The fact that it's so different and interesting lifts it above the stale pathetic attempt at a beat'em-up that was Clayfighter.

The majority of the game is just random button tapping, where instead of learning special moves, you just jump around and randomly press all the buttons. There's a practice mode, but you don't get a list of moves and to be honest I don't think there are that many in the game. There's a story mode, but as you tire of the mad visuals you'll realise that this is a pretty basic beat'em-up that doesn't have any real depth at all. It may be okay for very young players, but most people will quickly tire of Rakuga Kids. It's quirky and interesting but eventually dull and annoying ●

of his opponent and blast him into space

N64 Score

A totally baffling beat'em-up that takes the best (or worst) of Japanese eccentricity and throws it into a beat'em-up with Parrapa the Rappa-style characters. As you start to play it the madness becomes more and more profound as characters turn into speaker systems, rockets or whatever daft special weapons you can imagine and use them to bounce each other around the levels. The gameplay is similar to Clayfighter, which is perhaps Rakuga Kids greatest downfall and despite having a wonderfully quirky design and well animated characters, the actual game is a letdown. This is a very limited beat'em-up with hardly any special moves and it soon degenerates into frantic button bashing. Rakuga Kids is an interesting game that might be good to rent out for the night if you fancy a laugh. But you won't be laughing if you buy it MARK

● ALEX It's completely beyond me how this type of game can be seen as an acceptable form of entertainment. In no way is it deserving of a release on the N64 and thankfully will never darken our shores. Funny peculiar - not ha ha

● STEVE Don't be fooled by the quirky graphics, it's still bland fare. It's got some amusing special moves, but wipe away the colourful surface and you're left with a game that fails to innovate, and doesn't stretch the N64 at all

● NOEL For sheer novelty value Rakuga Kids entertained me for longer than most of the bland beat'em-ups I've seen (ie 30 mins instead of 10). If you loved the awful Clayfighter, give this a look but don't expect the fun to last

● READER REVIEW This was dead funny to watch with really stupid characters. I didn't really get bored by it, but I know what the others are talking about. Rent this out

Iggy's Reckin'

Isn't Mark supposed to review filth like this?

A real poor show from Iguana this one I'm afraid. Not even a healthy portion of originality can save players from the depths of Iggy's Reckin' Balls blandness

The rollercoaster sections are far from thrilling

Don't know what he's grinning at. Driven mad with boredom?

BY THE END of this review you can probably call me a hypocrite. I'm always banging on about how I'm a big fan of originality, and generally anything that's a little bit different will get a thumbs up from me even in the face of a hostile reaction from other members of the team (I still champion the cause of Fire Electric Pen to this day). Yet here we get something genuinely unique - a gaming experience unlike no other you will have ever come across - and I'm winding up to give it a bit of a slating.

Marble madness

Why? Well, despite all of its quirkiness, even taking into consideration all of its new ideas, it's just not a very good game. The idea has obviously been to cross a basic platformer with an average racing game in the hope that the whole would magically become greater than the sum of its parts, but it's just not come off. An 'Either or' decision should have been made somewhere along the line and maybe, just maybe we'd have got a good racer or platform game. Instead, what I can only presume to be indecisiveness on the part of the development team have damaged a previously impeccable reputation.

Iguana have positioned themselves nicely as one of the leading N64 developers, with titles like Turok and Quarterback Club helping both themselves and Acclaim to rake in piles of cash both here and the US. And that makes Iggy's all the more disappointing. You tend to expect more than something that wouldn't be out of place on an Amiga from one of the N64's premier developers, but I'm sure it's merely a blip on their radar than the start of a continued downward slide into oblivion.

Ballblazer

I suppose I should flesh out a few gameplay details really, but you'll have to excuse me if I seem to be lacking a little enthusiasm here because I'm really struggling to get excited about this one. Basically you control one of the Reckin' Balls as they race against each other on a series of twisting tracks. Where it differs from your run-of-the-mill racer is that the track is a little 'wackier'. You'll need to master and make use of a small number of special skills and power-ups if you're to make it to the top first.

For example each character can jump (necessary for clearing gaps in the track) but they can also fire out a grappling hook that will allow them to pull themselves up to unreachable heights. This grappling hook can also be used to defend against or attack the other competitors in the race in various ways, such as hurling them off the track or smashing them

Obstacles Buddies & Baddies

Stomples have serious attitude problems. Only grapple-wielding can stop them

Charlie is the medallion man of the bunch. Overall, a good competitor

Narlie is a jacked up Halloween lantern and is Iggy's arch rival

Chatter is a lethal player from Iceland, who can slice almost anything

Amanda is the second female Reckin' Ball. She's one cool 'chick'

What a happy bunch. Shame about the people who play it

Multi-player

One to four players can speed along the tracks at once in battle mode, team combo mode and time trial. This is all split screen - either horizontally or vertically depending on a player's preference - and provides some of Iggy's few enjoyable moments. In battle mode players use weapons against each other in what's essentially a standard race featuring numerous power ups such as freeze bombs, seeking projectiles and reverse controls. Time Trial speaks for itself while in team combo mode players team up against each other.

into the ground and leaving them dazed. I've gone into the power ups elsewhere, but basically that's it. Each race consists of a number of laps around the track and the first one to finish is the winner.

Wreck and roll

If it sounds like fun then let me assure you it isn't. There are all sorts of two and four player modes which go some way towards saving it from total tedium, but it can't escape the accusation of being a bad idea. As you'd expect, Iggy have executed it well enough but, to use a weak analogy - when the ingredients you're working with come from Netto you can't expect the finished cake to taste anything but bland

I've been well into everything Acclaim have put out so far, but I'm sorry, I'd rather watch an entire series of Duck Patrol than have to play this again. So I don't think I'll bother ●

These are passive creatures with poison spikes on their back

Q-Tea loves danger, dancing and the 'cuteness' of a race

These paranoid little creatures patrol the tower platforms

N64 Score

IGGY'S RECKIN' Balls has turned out to be a major disappointment, not because I was expecting great things (all through its development it's failed to ignite even the tiniest spark of interest in me), but because of the names attached to it. That a top drawer developer such as Iggy and a grade A publisher like Acclaim should be responsible for a game that leaves me as cold as this one does is surprising. When you think about it, although it's original in some ways, it's only because it's a mixture of styles that have never been tried before - there's nothing new feature wise - and when the styles clash this badly, you look at that pile of totally unoriginal Doom clones in a whole new light. I'm still a fan of trying to do something different, but it's probably a good idea to try and put something enjoyable in the gameplay mix as well. STEVE

● ALEX One of the most original games on the N64 certainly, but originality doesn't necessarily mean the game's gonna be any good. It is good, but nothing more than that. The idea's there, but the implementation isn't

● MARK This looked interesting at first, and was probably a good idea on paper. It's just a shame it didn't stay on the drawing board. Platform racing may seem like a novel twist, but it becomes tedious after about five minutes

● NOELY Beneath the cute characterisation and the original ideas lurks a platform/puzzle game of alarmingly shallow depth. It's a simple concept that's easy to pick up and play, but it's far, far easier to put down and never return to

● READER REVIEW I quite enjoyed this in its own little way, but I'd have been gutted if I'd had to pay for it. Nowhere near up to N64 standards in my opinion

Welcome to the beautiful island of Hawaii

My first ever SNES review was of a golf game, and you know what? This one's no bloody better

Get on the green and suddenly acquire the power of invisibility

Thanks to the crap putting system, this 'tiddler' is tricky

Just like the shot Superkev did for Sunderland the other day

GA TOUR Golf is the benchmark golf game across all formats (and we're still waiting for one to grace the N64) – It has an easy control system, but success is only possible through accurate use of it. Shot strength is expressed as a percentage and you have to gauge how hard to hit the shot depending on your lie, the wind and the hazards that lie ahead of you. If you happen to hit the ball full power, you have to be spot on with your third button tap so you don't hook or slice the ball wildly across the course.

These principles, when applied correctly, set down the foundations for a great golf game. Add AT LEAST two courses to the mix and you've got a varied challenge – anything on top of that, such as putting or driving practice adds to the overall enjoyment. What no golf game has done before is a scenario mode. Here you could become a 'real' golfer where you're put into a 'real-life' tournament golf situation from the past. A similar feature appears in ISS and F1 World Grand Prix – two vastly different games, but ones which are enhanced no end by their great scenario modes

Good Old Noely

In the April issue, Noely reviewed Augusta Masters 98 (AM98), which at first glance looks identical to Waialae. Sadly for Waialae, the former is actually a lot better. The flawed control system of AM98 has

Hi. My name's Alex Lee and this is how to swing a golf club properly. Bend your knees slightly, loosen your shoulders, been further tampered with to effectively create two difficulty levels – one of which is far too easy, the other being far too hard. On easy, your drive is simply a matter of leathering the ball as hard as you like, without having to worry about hooking, slicing or 'duffing' (topping) the ball.

Handy/rubbish power gauge

Unless you're on a particularly long par five, the following approach shots are made easier with a handy marker at a point on your power gauge to aim at – thus taking away any guesswork on your part. This marker, however, can be misleading, particularly if you've landed in the front of a bunker.

Hit the gauge marker bang on and the ball will unerringly plop back in the sand at the far side of the bunker. Why? Because the distance the ball would have travelled would have been considerably further had it been able to roll on, which obviously it'll

Go on, son, give it some welly. Or at least hit it hard

Match Play is the best option – the game's over quicker never do if it's landed back in the sand.

Conversely, on 'difficult' (which you select by turning 'easy shot' off in the options screen), there's no indication whatsoever as to how hard you need to hit the ball. I must admit I don't mind this too much as you can make an educated guess judging by the different areas of shading on the power gauge, but someone completely new to the game, who hadn't experienced AM98, would find the difference between the two levels of difficulty too much to handle.

Just the one course

Waialae could have pseudo-saved its bacon had it upped the number of courses to anything above one. But it hasn't. I know people who love simulation-like accuracy in their sports games, but if a game like F1 World Grand Prix can feature 17 completely accurate tracks modelled on real circuits all over the world, then a golf game should be able to muster up at least a couple of different courses, even if they're not emulations of real ones.

Surely, any keen games player would willingly swap one (admittedly very good) simulation course

Almost makes you wanna go and buy a glass of Malibu

One of the game's nicer touches – the reflections

keep your eye on the ball, then leather the bast!

Recommended Listening

Our Art Editor Jim Eagers is a bit weird. Which goes a long way to explaining why he has a Hawaiian record collection amounting to an unbelievable 29 LPs! Apparently, they're readily available in charity shops such as Oxfam and Save The Children and can be bought for as little as 25p! The daft thing is, many of the bands purporting to be Hawaiian are actually from places as cold and mundane as Liverpool and Essex!

Waialae Country Club Golf Classics

Fancy a game of golf? No ta, I'm off to meet some hula girls

Things got a hole lot better

It's looking good

Going down...

Get in there!

for, say, four courses dreamt up by the game's developers?

Sorry that this is turning into a bit of a rant, but the most irritating thing about AM98 was the short putting game. In PGA, you're given a lot of leeway, meaning that the closer the ball is to the hole the easier it is to putt. In Waialae you're just as likely to miss a two footer as you are a fifty footer! The power gauge remains the same you see – when you're a foot away you can still feasibly blast it 70 foot past. This shouldn't be allowed!

The genius of golf

The gauge should shorten accordingly and it's not something that needs a genius to suss out. A bit of attention to this would have improved the game no end. It makes you think that the development team have no love of golf nor of gameplay for that matter!

As you can guess, I'm sorely disappointed with Waialae – I enjoyed the AM98, as did Mark and Noely as we could just about forgive its faults. If only they'd been addressed properly and not been exacerbated then Waialae would have been a pleasure to play. It's not – it's a let-down and an example of what's effectively a Jap to US conversion (okay, so the course is completely different, but so what?), that's somehow gone all wrong.

The only thing that's been improved is the animation sequence of the ball plopping into the hole – you actually see it going down this time rather than the ball being over the hole one frame then completely disappearing the next. In much the same way as I'm disappearing off to dig out my old Macintosh Powerbook for a game of PGA Tour Golf ●

N64 Score

OH DEAR. Maybe my love for golf games is so great that my expectations are just too high, but Waialae certainly doesn't match up to them. For £50 I'd feel sorely disappointed if I bought this and it's on this basis that I'm giving it a lower mark than its flawed, but enjoyable predecessor Augusta Masters '98. There hasn't been enough attention paid to the game for it to warrant any real praise. The digitised golfers and crowd are just jerky 2D cut-outs on a landscape that's been created using a non-compatible graphical style. The playability is severely afflicted with annoying faults (such as the insane, lazily programmed putting system) and overall Waialae Country Club Golf Classics is a case of pseudo-near yet oh so far. In future, give us a decent control system and a choice of different courses and we'll all be happy with the results. ALEX

● MARK I've enjoyed playing a few rounds of golf on Waialae, but you can tell it's no PGA Tour. Golf games are great fun, so let's hope the next N64 effort is a lot better. In the meantime, if you're really into golf then take a look

● STEVE It's alright, but once you've seen the one course on offer you'll soon start to get bored. It's the best golf game on the N64 so far, no doubt about that, but there's hardly been any decent competition at all really

● NOELY With hindsight I scored this too highly when I reviewed the Jap version. The fact I enjoyed playing this is more to do with the fact that I love golf games than this being a particularly good example. Below par but still fun

● READER REVIEW I don't mind it as I'm a big golf fan and I've been waiting for a golf game on the N64 for ages. I'd have preferred a few more courses though I must admit Steve Johnston, Aberdeen

All Star Baseball '99

A couple of cheats for this for this stunningly realistic baseball game. We've got two and they make the players look decidedly silly. Go to the 'cheat codes' option and type in:

PRPPAPLYR

Paper Players (Parrapa the Rappa?)

GOTHELIUM

Big Heads, Bats and Feet

Cheat Against the Computer

This one's sneaky. Wait until you're batting then hit the ball anywhere you like. Quickly pause the game and switch your controller to the other team. Now you can control the fielding and make it as bad possible. Wait until down, C-left, C-right and Start. You should hear a chime if you've done it properly and you'll now be able to access all cars, cups and tracks (even the X-cup which randomly creates tracks for you). This works on the Japanese version and we can only hope that it works on the UK version when it's released.

Super Small Vehicles

On the vehicle select screen press L, R and all four C buttons and you'll be able to race with small ships. They still pack a fair speed though!

Change Vehicle Colour

When you're on the vehicle customisation screen press the R button to change the colour of your ship.

Rotate Vehicle

You can spin the vehicles around on the vehicle select screen by using the four C-buttons. So take a good look!

your player has run around then change back. Dirty tactic that one!

Banjo-Kazooie

Make Banjo big-headed or turn him into a washing machine. Make sure you check out the new Banjo cheats to get infinite lives or be invincible with unlimited gold feathers.

Treasure Trove Code

All of the cheats involve typing codes on the lettered floor in the sandcastle on the Treasure Trove Cove level. First you have to fix the bucket of water by filling him up with eggs (use the Z and C-down buttons). Then you'll be able to stomp on the letters by pressing A and then Z. Before the codes will work though you have to earn them in the game by playing Bottle's jigsaw challenge. Each time you complete a jigsaw you'll get a new code from Bottles that you can enter in on the Sandcastle floor

Big Head Banjo

Go into Banjo's home (right at the start) and use the C-up button to look at the picture of Bottles above the fireplace. You should enter Bottles' jigsaw game. Each time you complete a jigsaw you'll get another code of bottles. The first is BOTTLESBONUSONE, type it in on the floor of the sandcastle in Treasure Trove Cove to play with a big noggin.

Big Hands and Big Feet

After getting the first cheat go back and play the second Bottles jigsaw game. This time you'll be given a cheat called BOTTLESBONUSTWO. Type it in at Treasure Trove Cove for great big flapping hands.

Big Head and Wings Kazooie

Go and play the third Bottles jigsaw game and he'll give you the code: BOTTLESBONUSTHREE. Type it in at Treasure Trove Cove to have a big bird on yer back.

Tall Skinny Banjo

Beat the fourth puzzle game and Bottles will give you the code: BOTTLESBONUSFOUR. Type it out at Treasure Trove Cove to get a lanky Banjo.

Big Hands, Big Feet and Skinny Banjo

Keep going through the puzzle games until you complete the fifth one and Bottles will give you the code: BOTTLESBONUSFIVE. Spell this code out at Treasure Trove Cove to get a very odd looking Banjo indeed.

Giant Banjo-Kazooie

Complete the sixth Bottles jigsaw and he'll give you the final (or so he claims) cheat called BIGBOTTLESBONUS. Enter this cheat at the Treasure Trove Cove to get a massive Banjo and Kazooie.

Washing Machine Banjo-Kazooie

Yes, I also thought I was being wound up when I first heard about this one. But it's true I tell ya! Bottles is lying when he says you've found all the codes. Go back and complete the seventh Jigsaw game and you'll get this code: WISHYWASHYBANJO. Enter it on the floor of the sandcastle on Treasure Trove Cove and you can play the game as a spin-dry washing machine. It's a weird experience!

Cancel All Codes

To turn any of the codes off you have to go back to the Sandcastle at Treasure Trove Cove and Spell out: NOBONUS. This will turn you back to normal. Well as normal as Banjo and Kazooie can get.

20 Goldfeathers

Go to the entrance for the Rusty Bucket Bay and to your right you'll see a cave with three pipes. Smash the one in the middle and head inside. Hit the switch to raise the water level and jump out of the water and quickly head to your right. In the cave you will find the third spellbook which gives you the code: GOLDFEATHERS. You must enter the code at Treasure Trove Cove for it to work.

200 Blue Eggs

Go to Bubbleloop Swamp and get turned into a crocodile. Exit the level and turn left and head into the pipe that leads to the snow world. Go through the pipe at the top of the hill and you'll find the spell book. He will give you the code: BLUEEGGS. Type the code in at Treasure Trove Cove and you'll be able to carry up to 200 eggs at once.

100 Red Feathers

Go to Mad Monster Mansion and have Mumbo Jumbo turn you into a pumpkin. Now head out of the level and go up the winding path towards the volcano. You'll now find the red spell book.

Talk to the book and you'll get the code: REDFEATHERS. Now head to Treasure Trove Cove and type the code in on the Sandcastle floor and you'll be able to carry up to 100 flying feathers. Now you can spend much more time flying around the game

It's not the winning that counts, it's how you play the game (yeah right!). When you finish a multi player game and your score comes up, press left. The screen will scroll over and give you an award for your game playing technique. The award best describes your fighting personality.

Regeneration Pattern

Players regenerate in one of five places on each level. The N64 goes through these places in order.

The best way to find each regeneration point is to go on a two player game by yourself and keep shooting the players and noting where they reappear. You'll learn the five points for each level.

Now note where the second player starts and when you kill him he'll reappear at the next point on your list. Make sure you head for this point straight away and by the time he's reappeared you should already be ready and waiting.

To help you on your way here's the five restart points for the bunker level:

- 1: As you walk down the steps to the main room, your opponent will be up the stairs on the right.
- 2: In the cell where you start on Bunker two (1 player game.)
- 3: At the top of the stairs by the helicopter pad.
- 4: In the small room where one of the documents is (1 Player game.)

5: As you exit the room with both cells, go straight on and it's the first door on the left.

Banjo-Kazooie

Get all Items.

Once you have got all three of the spell books you can fill up on items by going to the Sandcastle and stamping out this code: BLUEREDGOLDFEATHERS

Skip Text

The ultimate in ignorance. Try playing the game whilst completely ignoring everything that's said to you. If you don't want to read something that's being said press the L, R and B buttons all at once to skip the text.

Transform For Free ▲

This trick will let you transform without having to give Mumbo any tokens. Start a new file and get at least five tokens to start with. Now access Treasure Trove Cove and get the sandcastle Jiggy. Now change into a washing machine (see the other set of Banjo codes) and head into Mumbo's hut and you can transform for nothing. It's a bit long winded but it's more sneaky than just entering the infinite Mumbo Tokens code

Rocket Jump

When you've got the rocket launcher, if you aim it at your feet and fire it knocks you upwards. Combine this with the jump button and you can hop up to otherwise unreachable places. You'll lose a fair bit of energy though so using the god mode (invincibility) from the debug menu is a good idea.

Snowboard Kids

Get the hidden kid and all the tracks without any of that hard work.

All Tracks and Characters

Go to the title screen (the one with all the characters on it) and press the following: Control stick down, ► block for the second and low kick for the third. If you hold up whilst pressing the buttons the icons will toggle backwards.

In this table the player one and player two columns indicate the number of times each player must press each of the buttons. For example, the code 123 indicates that you must press LK once, block twice and HK three times. Don't worry, you'll get the hang of it and the number of special effects in this game makes learning these codes worthwhile.

055	055	The Rain Stage
066	066	Snake Stage
101	101	Shaolin Temple
202	202	Living Forest
303	303	Prison

NFL Quarterback Club '98

Use the 'enter cheat' option and type in these codes to change your players and mess generally muck around with the game. You can only use one code at a time though.

Cheat menu options include big, tall, thin, fat players and the ability to make the ref the size of King Kong. Great stuff!

Extra Teams

Go to the team selection screen and press C-up, L and C-left. You should hear the slap-shot sound and there will be three extra teams to choose.

Random Team

Are you so indecisive that you can't even choose a team? If so, press L + R on the team selection screen and the team will be chosen for you.

Perfect Player

Select the 'create a player' option and enter the name as 'Jim Jung.' You should get a perfect player and still be able to change the features such as name, weight, size.

Bonus Points on Season Mode

Quake 64

No great shoot'em-up is complete without a God mode. And Quake 64 is no exception.

Debug mode

Go to load game and select 'do not use pak.' Now enter the password as QQQQ QQQQ QQQQ. It should say 'incorrect password', but if you go to the options screen you'll see an option called 'debug mode.'

This one sounds a bit suicidal but it's a really useful trick.

Forsaken 64

Experts' Guide Part Two

Welcome to Part 2 of our guided tour through the magical worlds of Banjo Kazooie. With our help you'll soon be able to rescue your sister Tooty from the clutches of the gruesome Gruntilda and ultimately finish the game (or will you? Banjo Tooie anyone?). Don't worry though, because we think the game's such a storming classic. Indeed, because we worship the very ground that Banjo (or Kazooie) walks on, we've conscientiously avoided a walkthrough format. Nevertheless, our guide shows you where to find all the Jiggy's, lets you locate each and every Jinjo as well as giving you all the vital information you'll need to help you get through the perils of Gruntilda's Lair unscathed. Enjoy.

It's going off!

By Alex Lee

“We are very excited about our first N64 title, Fighting Force 64 is a great addition to the already high-quality library of N64 titles”

Mike McGarvey,
CEO of Eidos

Left: Zeng makes his exit in a helicopter, but not before letting go a few hundred rounds of ammo

“Zeng sets his mind to a goal and achieves it – no matter what”

Left: Alana McKendrick may look soft as shite, but she's tough as old boots with big steel toe caps

YOU WANNA scrap? Take it outside because this battle is too big for some skinny ass arena. Fighting Force features four killer characters, dozens of brutal weapons and tons of crushing special moves. The vicious 3D action goes so fast there's only time to remember half the golden rule. So by any and all means, do unto others because in your hands, almost anything can become a weapon. Just remember to wash them afterwards.

Follow the exploits of four killer characters: Mace Daniels, Hawk Manson, Ben (Smasher) Jackson and Alana McKendrick in a game where just about anything can become a deadly weapon. It's down to our heroes to fight a bloody path through post-millennium mayhem, courtesy of the infamous Dr Zeng.

A variety of weapons may be collected, one way or another here, the inner city streets are littered with weapons of all sorts. Some of your own making, others ready-made and banned in most states.

But remember, it's gonna take more than a semi-automatic to survive these 3D mean streets, subways and scum-filled city parks, all of which provide hours of endless explosions, non-stop shootouts and virtual violence of the highest quality. In this game, 'fighting the crowds' has a slightly different meaning. Film buffs think

John Woo, footy fans think of a night at Millwall – the rest of you imagine the last time you got a kicking. Fighting Force lets you get stuck in without any chance of serious injury, which can't be bad ●

“Fighting Force 64 features 3D brawling in a do anything, go anywhere 3D environment”

Pre View Chopper

Does anyone really still use the word 'chopper' as a euphemism for a penis?

By Alex Lee

Above: The world's biggest pair of dog tags proved a major hindrance for the US Air Force

GT INTERACTIVE are set to bring us one of the two up and coming helicopter games for the N64, the other being Software Creations' bizarrely named Blade & Barrel game.

Despite the phallic violence suggested in the title (which, thankfully, is nothing more than pure coincidence), Chopper Attack appears to be shaping up nicely – as you can see by the accompanying screenshots we took from playing the game recently – and could turn out to be a surprise N64 hit for the software company, unfortunately rooted to the bottom of N64 Pro's Software House League table (see News section).

Big levels, limited bullets

Half-way through its development cycle, the Seta-developed game had five stages which were then split into three sub-missions, but this set-up has since been abandoned in favour of seven larger levels. Each level only allows you a limited amount of firepower and it's important to take out as many enemies as you can because any you leave behind follow you to the next section. To add further pressure to the scenario, each level is set against the clock, so you can't afford to hang around.

Visually the game hasn't changed too much from its previous arcade incarnations, although

Left: Not only are there loads of helicopters in Chopper Attack, there's a set of aeroplanes too!

Missus!

Left: A veritable cast of thousands. Okay, well maybe not thousands, but at least seven or so...

“Ever noticed how people always duck far too low when they’re getting out of helicopters?”

All around: Not much to choose looks-wise between UK and Jap versions, but the control the helicopters do now seem more varied in design and the huge explosions have been refined for the UK PAL version, as you can see in the accompanying screenshots.

Retro Bike Similarity

Finally, there will be a choice of at least eight different choppers (not the old bikes), each with varying statistics and weapons capabilities. GT Interactive is confident that although the helicopter's control may seem initially tricky for new players, they will quickly settle in, allowing the N64's superb analogue control stick to shine once again.

The game was set for a March release in Japan, but the tweaking pushed the date back to July 8 – N64 Pro can exclusively reveal that it's actually not bad as the tough-ish control method has been improved and one or two rubbish-looking in-game textures have been tarted up a little.

Before any of you write in, this game was published in Japan and the US under the name of Wild Choppers. In the words of GT Interactive's Matt Broughton, "Wild Choppers was universally attacked in Japan and the US for having a less than friendly control system, and having improved this so drastically – and because, in general, people had never really known about Wild Choppers unless they were into the import scene – it seemed better to make clear that this was a new, improved product."

Fobbed Off?

Let's hope so – UK N64 owners have already been fobbed off with too many dodgy conversions of US/Jap origin carts and would welcome a game that sports genuine improvements over its predecessors. Check the review next month ●

Pre view Body Ha

Aliens invade earth at various points in history and it's up to you to save mankind

COVER STORY

“Body Harvest is designed and written with the N64's new hardware, graphics handling and analogue control system in mind”

to fix your position.

Above right: Daisy crops up now and then to give you invaluable advice about your mission

Insect I

By Alex Lee

GREMILIN'S N64 debut, Body Harvest, is the latest game from the Dundee-based development team DMA, who have come up trumps with yet another game which spans genres and offers players a genuinely new gaming experience.

The story begins in the mid-nineteenth century, when a new comet is discovered in the skies above Earth. Regarded since ancient times as harbingers of destruction, comet was named Shesha – the snake, after its long, unnaturally brilliant tail. In time the comet passed behind the sun and the people of Earth forgot about it in the celebration of a new century, the twentieth, an age of science, reason and hope. The rumours started a few years later. Stories of monstrous beings. Insects who would appear from nowhere, consuming men, women and children, destroying everything in their path.

Of course no-one really believed any of this. Even in 1908 when a ferocious explosion inexplicably devastated hundreds of square miles of forest in Tunguska, Northern Russia, a rational explanation was found. It wasn't until 1916 that eyewitnesses and radio reports confirmed an attack on the islands of Greece. Rescuers rushing to the scene

Adam Drake ▶

A genetically enhanced soldier, the fate of the Earth, of mankind itself is in his hands. Adam is capable of driving the nearest available form of transport, using loads of different types of guns and conversing with the locals

nvaders

Below: A screenshot taken from the final level where you hammer around in a 'space hovercraft'

► found an impassable barrier, a shimmering blue wall that could not be broken or breached. For a full 24 hours the walls remained in place. The rescuers watched helpless as those inside the barriers beat at the wall with their fists, begging and screaming for help as they were hunted down and devoured by the predators. At dawn the next day, the walls were gone. The rescuers found the land silent, devoid of human life. Not a single survivor was found.

The following day the barriers appeared around the coast of Southern Spain. In 24 hours they were gone. The day after that Eastern Canada was the target, then the South island of Japan. The pattern of the attacks was unpredictable, but the method was always the same. The barriers would appear in the night, remain for 24 hours, then vanish, leaving nothing but the charred wreckage of houses and the ghastly silence of those who had disappeared.

The creatures too, had vanished, leaving humanity in peace for a time to contemplate events that threatened Earth. Where had they come from? Where would they appear next? And the question that every single person in the world was asking, 'How can they be stopped?'

Scientists in India discovered the answer to the first question. The comet Shesha, the great snake, had not vanished back into space, but had somehow manoeuvred itself into a tiny orbit around the sun. It was now heading away from Earth, back towards the sun. But it would be back. 25 years said the scientists, before it's once more at its closest approach to Earth. 25 years for the human race to plan its defences.

“Body Harvest is not a 3D conversion of an older 2D game, a port from another platform or arcade”

It is now 2016. The Earth is dead. Mankind annihilated, harvested to extinction by a race of monstrous aliens for more than a century. The last remnants of the human race, a small band of scientists on board Space Station Omega, are working on a last, desperate plan. Alpha Command, a prototype time machine is nearing completion. Capable of holding a two man crew, it can be used to travel back to the past and maybe stop the alien predators from destroying the human race, changing the course of history. Adam Drake is the man chosen to take the trip. A genetically enhanced soldier, the fate of mankind is in his hands. But, before preparations can be completed, every alarm aboard Station Omega lights up. The aliens are back – and hungry!

The game is a 3D action/adventure set in vast levels covering several continents and over one hundred years of history. Starting in Greece 1916, the player must stop a swarm aliens harvesting and devouring the local inhabitants of Greece's islands and villages.

The player can use any means at their disposal to navigate around the landscape. Each era contains cars, motorbikes, lorries, vans, taxis, emergency services and military vehicles that can be commandeered and used. Every level contains different types of boats, ships, planes and helicopters that can be controlled and used by the player. There's even an opportunity to control a nuclear weapon!

Obviously Adam's not being sent in unarmed. There are nearly 20 different types of weapon, from the shotgun and machine gun to grenades, dynamite, a sniper's rifle and hidden weapons developed from alien technology, capable of blowing down a house. Body Harvest also features over 50 characters who can offer you advice, give clues, reveal hidden areas and bonuses and even insult your dress sense! ●

Right: A map of your locality can be called up at any time to give you an idea of where you are

Daisy

This chick reminds us all of one of the women in Blade Runner (Pris, was it? Maybe not...). Her role in the whole shebang is basically to give Adam mission briefings, advice about where to go, who to talk to and what nearby equipment he can put to good use

“The vile creature you can see in the background is just one of the many terrible alien life-forms you, as Adam, have to engage in battle”

Car Trouble

The main things you'll find yourself doing as Adam Drake are as follows – exploring buildings, shooting aliens, talking to and saving humans and driving around in whatever vehicle happens to be nearby. Not only are there over 70 vehicles littered around the play area, from luxury saloon cars to futuristic space hovercrafts, each mode of transport handles in a completely different manner.

After playing Body Harvest for a few minutes, you'll soon realise that shooting aliens is a great deal safer from the comfort of a moving car than out in the open! Apart from that, all the modes of transport are useful for just diving into so you can explore a wider area of terrain in a much shorter length of time than it would take on foot.

WIN

An N64 game of your choice

Write to: N64 PRO, Freepost, Media House, Adlington Park, Macclesfield SK10 4YE or email: alexl@idg.co.uk

*In the most controversial letters page we've yet printed, the England/Scotland and male/female wars rage on. Who will win? Does it really matter? More importantly, what do you think about it all? Remember, it's FREE to write to N64 Pro and each issue we're printing more letters than the previous one. You may just see your name here one day! ALEX

ISS 96 World Cup 87

ISS 98 = 96%. Thank you! Finally now maybe we can all convince the FIFA-loving scum-sucking whassismnames that ISS is, and always has been, the better game. For months I have argued with the FIFA blokes about ISS's superiority and their argument always boils down to one point, the license. 'But ISS has amazing gameplay!' 'Yeah but FIFA's got a license' 'ISS's graphics are little short of amazing' 'Yeah but it ain't got a license' 'ISS has the best...' 'But it ain't got a...' 'I'll shove that license up your...' And so on. Thank-you for giving me the greater firepower. ISS 98 got 96%, FIFA got 87%. The argument's over!

Alex Palmer, Hyde

Nice to see some straight talking from one of our readers instead of the usual 'your mag's great' followed by a list of questions that have already been answered in the mag time and again

League Table Farce

I've read almost every N64 Pro issue - I only need 3, 4 and 6. All the issues I've read are excellent. The only thing I don't like about the mag is the Software House Leagues. They give points out to games with low percentages and none to high scoring games. Tetrisphere got 60% and Mortal Kombat 4 got 83% - it got no points and Tetrisphere got one. Why do you give low scoring games more points than higher scoring games? And why did Aero Gauge

Ye Olde Curiosity BOX

Here's the bit where excerpts from slightly rubbish letters get printed - what must go through your minds is beyond our understanding get -2 when it got 86% from the review?

Tarrant Browning, Barry

Good to see someone paying attention. The reason we have the software house leagues is so all four of the writers and Production Editor Lewis can all have their say, rather than just stick with the opinion of an individual

One of ISS 98's rendered promo characters, modelled on the eccentric Mexican Jorge Campos

Back

Q WHILE playing GoldenEye I made up a game, Russian Roulette. Pick any level, on multiplayer and pick licence to kill. One player picks up a single gun and the rest line up.

The player with the single gun presses B as many times as he or she wants and sees if they land on a gun or not, then press Z to fire. If you have a gun, one of the other players will die, if not he will survive. Do this along the line until one player is left – he is the winner. Anon

A An interesting, sensible and well-formulated suggestion there

Q I AM JUST writing to say that Nintendo joypads are not actually that good. Sure they're comfortable and all that, but the design is flawed. For instance, when playing GoldenEye in solitaire mode (I started with Turok) the buttons are not all accessible, thus rendering the L button and D-pad useless. And in order to open a door with B, you need to let go of forward. So I think Nintendo should release a second pad, one more like (dare I say it) the Playstation's, which is comfortable, robust and practical. Richard Jenkins, via email

A Have you got really small hands, Richard?

Q I'VE always wondered what would happen if I wrote this – boll***s, sh*t, w***ker
Kristoffa Ricardo, West Midlands

A Not a great deal, except it's a lot more legible in printed form

Q I have just read the Feedback section in issue 11. Is Chris Quinn from another planet? He's moaning at you for stating the obvious! Scotland are shit! Then, to confirm my fears for this man, he says England should not have won the World Cup in '66 cos the ball never crossed the line!

If memory serves me correctly Chris, didn't that game finish 4-2? Even if it had been disallowed, we still pissed on the krauts! Anyway, if consoles were footy teams, the N64 would be England, whereas the PI**Station would be Scotland. Comprehend? Morocco, hah ha ha!
Scott Henshall, Manchester

A Anyone else who's not really bothered?

Q 1) WHY is Noel Edmonds on the Swap Shop page?

2) What is Alex's favourite N64 favourite character?
G. M. James, Birmingham

A 1) Because he used to introduce a 1970's Saturday morning TV show called Swap Shop
2) Goose out of PilotWings

Q Will there be any cricket or rugby games coming out on the N64?
Nearly everyone, All Over the Gaff

A Codemasters, who are currently working on Brian Lara Cricket for PI**Station and PC CD-Rom, will consider an N64 release if the aforementioned versions prove successful. As for rugby, a new version of Jonah Lomu is on the drawing board, but isn't likely to see the light of day until the millennium – and may not even come out on N64.

reviewer. Basically, all five of us get together and say how many points a game deserves in the Software house league. As there's five of us there's usually a difference of opinion, so the final Software House league score is the 'mode' average i.e. the score that the majority of the five of us think a game should get. Mark's a big fan of beat'em-ups, so he gave MK4 a high score – none of the rest of us liked it much so it ended up getting nought. The same applied to Aero Gauge. As for Tetrisphere, we thought it was just about worth a point. Let's face it, we generally disagree with anything Mark says or does!

“Why did Aero Gauge get -2 when it got 86% from the review?”

Moaning B**tards

Right, that's it! I am so annoyed I had to write to you. Every time I read your magazine I am confronted by a load of moaning b**tards harping on about how 'Nintendo games are too cute',

'They don't make games for adults', 'We want more guns and blood (or something to that effect) etc...

Please, please tell me I am not the only 20-something gameplayer who (dare I say it) actually likes cute and colourful, in fact they are the only type of game I have. Oh yes, you won't see any GoldenEye (gasp!), Quake (shock!) or Forsaken (faint!) in my console. Give me Mario, Diddy Kong Racing and Yoshi any day. The game on my most wanted list isn't Turok 2 or perfect Dark. It's Conker's Quest.

Anyway, my point is that I would just like to go against the grain and say... Cheers Nintendo. I am quite happy with my cutesy games, thank-you very much and I hope all you Yoshi-haters burn in Hell!

PS I fancy Link from Zelda. I get hot and sweaty just looking at the screenshots. Am I alone in these thoughts? Do I need help?
Geraldine Burns, Birmingham

Blimey, a bird who likes cutesy games, now there's a thing... No, but seriously, all the games you've mentioned you like are all quality games, so it does go to show that every release doesn't need blood and guns to appeal to the masses. As for fancying Link, you are indeed alone, although until he ► was recently put right, our publisher thought Link was a girl (and he probably fancied 'her' too).

Testostermoan

First of all I hope you don't start filling your mag with Banjo-Kazooie maps & guides – that hairy bastard makes me physically sick. Secondly, in issue 11 someone called K Hutcheson of Stanley wrote, 'This is the 90s – there are women who like football and computers'.

Who is she kidding? Just because of equality she's convinced herself she's into male hobbies. Listen darling, football isn't something you just like, it's something you love. It comes from deep inside. It pumps through every vein. So in future stay in the kitchen and cook something.

Another thing, just because you know how to switch an N64 on doesn't mean that you like it.

PS Top job, lads. It is our mag, isn't it?

FMV – Necessary?

I was searching through the internet the other day until I came across PI**Station chat where you talk to all those paranoid PI**Station lovers. They told me that the N64 didn't have many games so what did I do? I named each one of the games and shocked them all.

But then they struck again, saying that the N64 couldn't handle video graphics. I couldn't fight back so I turned off the PC with shock and ran to my beloved N64 placing each of my five games into the console but I couldn't seem to find any video real life scenes in any. So why is this?

Will Mission: Impossible and the next GoldenEye have actual speech, not rubbish boxes with tons of boring writing in them?

Oh yeah, also, the other day I walked into the upstairs there were about five top notch N64 games, brand new for £20 each. So if there are any readers from Swansea, get down to the Microstore!

Microstore and

Craig Miles, Swansea

“Listen darling, football isn't something you just like, it's something you love”

Letter of the month

Above: Top Gear Rally – half-decent, but not half as good as the magnificent F1 World GP

Get To The Point

FIRSTLY, I'd like to congratulate you on the only honest no bullshit magazine I've ever read (apart from Empire). I've been 'into' games machines for a few years (ever since I went to my mate's house and played on a strange black and white game of tennis – Ping I think).

I've had an Atari, Spectrum, C64, NES, Master System, Mega Drive etc. Then it stopped – out came the Saturn and the PI**Station. I played them eventually and thought 'I'm not paying £250 to wait while it loads – I may as well get my Speccy out again. That's not to say the games aren't good, I'm just very impatient and in this day and age I want to switch the power button on and play.

I heard about Nintendo's Project Reality and thought 'This is going to be great so I waited two years for the best console. Luckily I was working at Toys R Us at release time, so I got the first one. I took a week off work and abused the N64. When I'd finished Mario 64 after seven days and nights I felt great, although my wife thought I was strange trying to backflip onto our roof just to reach 'that star on our chimney'.

When this little problem died down, along came ISS. Oh dear, here we go again. My stepson would ask 'If we could play football. I'd say 'Of course we can.' He'd be there in his footy kit – I'd be there with my yellow controller. He'd burst into tears! Then came Top Gear Rally – which I think is the

with an impressive piece of FMV which makes the actual game pale into insignificance.

DKR Lover

I am 23 and I regularly play DKR. I make sure I find myself an hour or so to play it in. Now people who complain about cutesy games really annoy me. DKR is colourful and bright, but that doesn't mean it is not enjoyable, good to look at or as addictive as hell.

I have spent countless hours hunched at the game completing adventures 1 & 2 and now I have completed it (after seven months' hard work) I still play on the tracks trying to beat TT. What do you enjoy more: a crappy racer like Cruis'n USA or a tough challenging game with loveable characters and a great sense of style and humour?

M Workman, Warrington

said that, how many times do you want to watch the same piece of video footage (normally 'starring' appalling actors whose previous acting experience amounted to no more than a walk-on part in some daytime soap or other) motion video) to a greater extent than the N64, as it takes up loads of room. Having prior to or during a game?

N64 programmers have to think of cunning ways to get the best out of the cartridge space available and not kid gamers into thinking a game's going to be better than it actually is.

Mario 64's intro is from the actual game engine and is a perfect example of what an intro should really be like. Too many PI**Station CDs kick off

We think DKR's excellent, too - only now does it have a rival in the racing genre with the arrival of the excellent F1 World Grand Prix best one player racer yet (your review of the game was spot on).

Then came GoldenEye - what can I say? I still go into a panic when I walk down the street and see a security camera (shoot the bastard thing before the alarm goes off). What I'm rambling on about is being immersed in a game. That's what you get with this machine.

I know I did the right thing in waiting for the N64. I know PI**Station people will be saying I don't know what I'm talking about, but I do. I've spent hours on PI**Station games - Jersey Devil, Res Evil 2, Gran Turismo, FF VII etc and they don't seem quite right. They're all good, but not games I will go back to in two years' time.

I still play on Mario Kart (16bit), Metroid (16bit), Starwing, Speedball 2 (Mega Drive). I can honestly say that the majority of PSX games I have played don't have that longevity. I think people are losing the plot slightly here, with questions like 'When are we going to get a violent game i.e. Res Evil, Nightmare Creatures etc'. I'm sorry, but you don't need it. Look at GoldenEye. I'm not an old fart - I'm 25 years old. Violence doesn't necessarily mean good playability. If you want violence, go and sell your N64 and get a PSX.

Can you get someone to make Speedball 64? Go on, I know you can with all your contacts! I subscribed to you last month - cheers for the controller - I can blast the shit out of my missus now! There's no better feeling than using a sniper rifle in GoldenEye to shoot your partner's character in the back of the head - twice.

Nintendo are doing a good job, but please let's not have such a lull in games coming out for the UK. I was in Excitement Direct and saw 1080° Snowboarding in a box already for some lucky person to play but only if you've got an American console - why do we UK owners have to suffer?

PS I contradicted myself about the violence issue on purpose.

Andrew Salkeld, Aston, Oxon

Don't want to shatter all your illusions, Andrew, but if we could get anyone to make anything we liked, the N64 would be the only console in the world and we wouldn't be able to give any game less than 90%! As for your top ten games (not printed) of all time, you'll have already seen by now how close it is to some of our Nintendo format only top fives printed last month. Because you admitted to us you wrote the letter in work's time, we're giving you the letter of the month award. Write in and tell us which game you'd like and we'll get it in the post to you straight away.

Right: Any N64 game can now be yours, Andrew

The first game to appear under the Nintendo Sports label finally gives basketball the treatment it deserves. More serious than Hangtime and less fuzzy than NBA Pro, this is a fun, action packed and easy to play basketball that balances serious sport with playability.
